INTRODUCTION

Microlog: Canadian Research Index puts all of Canada's hard-to-find government and research literature at your fingertips. This monthly indexing, abstracting and document delivery service covers all levels of government in Canada, as well as institutions receiving research grants. Most titles included in Microlog are available in either paper or microfiche format. Combined with a microfiche collection, the Microlog Service is a powerful tool for finding Canadian report publications. The unique Microlog Accession Number is the key to immediate retrieval of any document.

SCOPE

Among other documents, Microlog includes research papers in physical, natural and social sciences, policy papers, important statistics, and annual reports. Every effort is made to ensure the currency of the index. For instance, documents appearing in the Checklist of Canadian Government Publications are delivered by Microlog approximately two months after publication of the list.

LANGUAGE POLICY

Documents issued in English or French are indexed and abstracted in the language of publication, while bilingual documents are indexed and abstracted in both languages.

SOURCES AND COVERAGE

Federal Documents: The Microlog editors review all checklists issued by the Canadian Government Publishing Centre and order every document relevant to the service. Except for serials, maps, pamphlets, and manuals, all monographs covered by the Federal Depository Plan are included in the index. Also, a special effort is made to track down elusive but important titles which do not appear in the lists.

Microlog offers a special collection of documents published by the Federal Government but not issued through the Federal Depository Plan. These titles, available to subscribers as the Non-Depository Publications collection, are indicated in the Titles section by a bullet (●). Microlog is also the direct distributing agent for many government bodies.

Provincial Documents: Depository arrangements with several provincial libraries have been established to ensure that Microlog subscribers receive all publications from those provinces. Where no depository arrangement exists, all publications lists issued by the province are reviewed for acquisitions.

Municipal Documents: Since these titles are very difficult to obtain, the Microlog editors make special efforts to include publications from municipal sources.

ACCESS

The Index provides access by subject, corporate or individual author, and series title.

The full Microlog file from 1979 to date, consisting of almost 50,000 records, is available online through Can/OLE. This is an ideal way to locate hard-to-find reports which may then be ordered directly online through the Can/DOCS service. Contact: Can/OLE Client Services, CISTI, Ottawa, Ontario, K1A 0S2.

FEATURES

Microlog comprises the following sections:

1. Titles and abstracts: A full bibliographic citation and a descriptive abstract for each title.
2. Name Index: Access by personal author, corporate author, and conference name.
3. Series Titles: Lists by title and number all reports in series in the service; series are available as an ongoing subscription or retrospective collection.
4. Subject Index: Descriptors based on Library of Congress and Canadiana Subject Headings are assigned to each document. A cross-referencing structure assists searchers.
5. Microfiche collections: Lists contents of each fiche collection for quick reference. These collections can be used as current awareness lists in broad subject areas to notify users of new acquisitions. This section is included in the annual cumulation as a separate fiched product.

MICROLOG AND CANADIAN STATISTICS INDEX

Statistical Material: The Canadian Statistics Index (CSI) provides further access to statistical material contained in Microlog monographs and special or annual reports. The CSI identification number has been included with the Microlog citation for the convenience of subscribers to the CSI fiche collection.

Annual Reports: Storage of annual reports in a single sequence has been a problem for clients in the past. The CSI numbers for annual reports are now listed in the bibliographic citation and appear on the microfiche header of each report, to make such sequencing possible.

DOCUMENT DELIVERY

Institutions may subscribe to complete or partial collections of the documents in Microlog. Individual copies on microfiche or paper reprint may be ordered through Micromedia's Document Delivery Service. To order, please contact:

INTRODUCTION

Microlog: Index de recherche du Canada met à votre disposition toutes les publications du gouvernement et les travaux de recherche difficiles à se procurer. Combiné aux collections sur microfiches, le service Microlog constitue un outil très efficace pour retrouver les publications des différents gouvernements du Canada, ainsi que celles des organismes qui reçoivent des subventions pour la recherche. Microlog est aussi un service de livraison de documents, sur microfiches ou sous forme imprimée.

CONTENU

Microlog contient entre autres des recherches en sciences physiques, naturelles et sociales, des énoncés de politique, des statistiques et des rapports annuels. Par l'intermédiaire du service Microlog, on peut obtenir les documents qui figurent sur la Liste des publications du gouvernement du Canada environ deux mois après leur parution sur cette liste.

POLITIQUE LINGUISTIQUE

Les ouvrages publiés en français ou en anglais sont indexés et résumés dans la langue de publication; les ouvrages bilingues sont traités dans les deux langues.

SOURCES

Publications fédérales: Les rédacteurs de Microlog examinent les listes émises par le Centre d'édition du gouvernement du Canada et commandent les documents pertinents. En dehors des publications en série, cartes, brochures et manuels, toutes les monographies régies par le Programme de dépôt du gouvernement fédéral figurent dans l'index, ainsi que des ouvrages importants ne figurant pas sur les listes.

Microlog propose aussi une collection spéciale de publications fédérales non déposées, identifiées par un point (●) dans la section Titres et résumés. Microlog est aussi l'agent de diffusion de nombreux organismes gouvernementaux.

Publications provinciales: Des ententes de dépôt ont été conclues avec plusieurs bibliothèques provinciales pour que les abonnés de Microlog reçoivent toutes les publications de ces provinces. Lorsqu'aucune entente n'existe, les listes de publications émises par les provinces sont examinées afin d'acquérir les documents.

Publications municipales: Ces ouvrages étant difficiles à se procurer, les rédacteurs de Microlog redoublent d'ardeur pour les inclure dans l'index.

ACCÈS

L'index imprimé est bilingue et les publications sont répertoriées par sujet, par auteur (collectivité et personne physique) et par titre de collection.

Le fichier complet de Microlog, de 1979 à aujourd'hui, contient près de 50,000 notices et est accessible sur

Can/OLE. Il s'agit d'un moyen idéal pour mettre la main sur des rapports difficiles à trouver qu'on peut commander par l'intermédiaire du service Can/DOCS. À ce propos, veuillez vous adresser au Service à la clientèle Can/OLE, ICIST, Ottawa (Ontario), K1A 0S2.

ORGANISATION DE L'INDEX

Microlog est divisé en cinq sections:

1. Titres et résumés: tous les titres sont catalogués et accompagnés d'un résumé descriptif.
2. Index des noms: donne un accès par auteur, collectivité-auteur et titre de conférence.
3. Titres de collections: tous les rapports publiés en série sont classés par titre et numéro. Ces collections peuvent être commandées individuellement.
4. Index des matières: les descripteurs permettent de trouver facilement les publications pertinentes; un réseau de renvois facilite la recherche.
5. Collections de microfiches: chaque collection apparaît dans une section séparée pour faciliter la recherche. Ces listes peuvent aussi servir à renseigner les usagers sur les nouveautés. Dans la refonte, cette section est insérée sous forme de microfiches.

MICROLOG ET L'INDEX DES STATISTIQUES DU CANADA

Données statistiques: L'Index des statistiques du Canada (CSI) constitue une autre source de référence sur les statistiques contenues dans certaines publications indexées dans Microlog. Celles-ci ont un numéro d'ordre spécial qui est inclus dans la référence bibliographique.

Rapports annuels: Afin de rendre le classement des rapports annuels plus facile, le numéro d'ordre CSI correspondant à ces documents figure maintenant dans les références bibliographiques et est inscrit sur les en-têtes de microfiches.

LIVRAISON DE DOCUMENTS

On peut s'abonner à l'ensemble ou à certaines des collections de documents de Microlog. On peut également commander des reproductions de documents sur microfiches ou sur papier par l'intermédiaire du service de livraison de documents de Micromedia. Pour commander, communiquer avec:

Sample CRI Search

"How can a person from a foreign country qualify for refugee status in Canada?"

The researcher can search in CRI as in any library catalogue - by subject, author and title.
Because the index is bilingual, searching can be done in English or in French.

Recherche type avec IRC

"Comment une personne d'un pays étranger peut-elle demander le statut de réfugié au Canada?"

La méthode de recherche dans IRC est la même que dans une bibliothèque, puisque les documents sont indexés par auteur, par sujet et par titre. L'index étant bilingue, la consultation peut se faire en français ou en anglais.

MICROLOG 96-05197 (2 fiche)

Presents a study conducted to determine the extent of the problem of inadequate restraint of child occupants of motor vehicles, to identify the types and frequencies of restraint errors, and to identify the predictors of and reasons for misuse of child restraints. A survey conducted at shopping centres survey provided detailed information on the use and misuse of restraint systems by children. A roadside survey provided an estimate of the use of restraints by children in Ontario. A telephone survey gave more detailed background information on parents and their understanding and attitudes about restraint systems. Statistical analyses indicated which variables were associated with children being restrained. Eight recommendations for further action and research are included.

The new legislation is needed to acknowledge the growth of electronic technology and the wide range of information now available to the public. The paper begins with a review of information rights in other countries, Canada, and other provinces. It then reviews the state of information rights in Manitoba, including rights of access, privacy rights, and current provisions of the provincial Freedom of Information Act. Finally, the paper lists principles of fair information practices concerning the collection of data, consent for collection or use, on use and re-use of personal information, and on disclosure, individual access, retention, security, and openness. The paper concludes with a list of issues related to the new legislation on which public comment is sought.

Describes a field study whose objective was to compare the physiological and morphological performance of natural (advance) and planted amabilis fir (Abies amabilis (Dougl.)) regeneration in response to a transition in microclimate from the understory of an old-growth montane forest into the stand edge and also into an adjoining clearcut. The study site, located on eastern Vancouver Island, was clear-cut in 1989 and fall-planted with yellow cedar (Chamaecyparis nootkatensis) in 1991. Amabilis fir nursery stock was planted at the site in April 1993. A climate station installed at each of three 75-by-5-metre plots monitored various environmental parameters such as air temperature, relative humidity, and photosynthetically active radiation. Other measurements made at the site included seedling photosynthesis, transpiration, xylem water potential, foliar nitrogen/phosphorus/potassium, leaf area, and seedling height.

This project sought to develop an approach to assessment and instruction for assessment to become a tool for improving instructional practice. This tool was applied to mathematics word problems in primary, junior, and intermediate divisions at Michikan school at Bears Lake, Ontario. A performance-based assessment approach was adopted, establishing six skill levels for math word problems within each division. A package of nine assessment items was presented to each student from grade 3 through 9 and results indicate the performance of Michikan students relative to their grade level. Major problems revealed included poor English skills, as well as student familiarity with thinking skills, particularly metacognitive analytical techniques of questioning, summarising, clarifying, and predicting. Recommends a new approach to a mathematics curriculum to maximise the strengths of First Nations student learning styles.

Reports on a study that used semipermeable membrane devices (SPMDs) to identify industrial effluents along the Athabasca River system that induce mixed function oxygenase (MFO) activity in fish cell lines. These SPMDs provided samples of known exposure time in effluents and river waters by simultaneously sampling the effluent stream and the river upstream and downstream of the mixing zone at each site. The investigators deployed the SPMDs for two weeks at one major town and five industrial wastewater sites (four pulp mills and one oil sands facility) on the Athabasca, and at one pulp mill on the Lesser Slave River. They tested SPMD extracts for MFO activity using cell culture techniques in top minnow (Poeciliopsis lucida) hepatoma cells. Results presented include comparisons of MFO induction potency between different sampling sites and between type of effluent source.

Nickel-copper-cobalt deposits found near St. Stephen, New Brunswick, have an average grade of 1% nickel, mainly present as a solid solution in the nickeliferous pyrrhotite phase of the ores. Previous attempts to produce a saleable nickel concentrate from this low-grade deposit have been unsuccessful. This report describes investigation of an alternative extraction process involving an initial upgrading of the ore through flotation and ferric chloride leaching of the upgraded ore to recover the nickel, copper, and cobalt. The work included flotation tests on the massive sulphide ores, disseminated ores, and a mixed ore from the deposit; laboratory-scale tests on ferric chloride leaching conducted to determine optimum process conditions and to define operational conditions; locked-cycle tests of a composite flotation concentrate; and an order of magnitude pre-feasibility economic evaluation of the process. The report also includes a technical review of patent literature for a nickel hydrometallurgical process. The appendix contains detailed test data.

Agriculture and sustainable development : policy analysis on the Great Plains

This study establishes a framework for analysis of current policies from the standpoint of their consistency with sustainable agriculture and sustainable development. The framework developed should be applicable throughout the Great Plains region and to similar semi-arid agricultural regions. The objectives of the study are to: identify the issues in agriculture and its sustainability on the Canadian Plains, including land use, degradation of prairie soil resources, preservation of biodiversity, water use and quality, socio-economic issues, global change, and federal and provincial policies; provide a set of principles and criteria for resolution of those issues; assist in understanding the effects of selected agriculture and trade policies on sustainable development; and propose specific sustainable action programs for the Plains, focusing on agriculture and ecosystems. Principles that formed the basis of the analytical framework included integrated management, conservation, rehabilitation, market viability, societal considerations, and global responsibility. The merit of the framework was tested by using it to assess the compatibility of four policies with sustainable agriculture: the Western Grain Transportation Act, the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act, the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act, and the North American Waterfowl Management Plan. Includes glossary.

This document sets out ambient water quality criteria for silver with the goal of protecting freshwater and marine aquatic life in British Columbia. Criteria were not set for human, livestock, or wildlife drinking water, recreational waters, irrigation water, or industrial water uses, since either suitable data documenting the effects of silver for these uses were lacking or the criteria would have been redundant. The document reviews the man-made and natural occurrence of silver in the environment, silver speciation and reactions (including water chemistry and bioaccumulation), silver exposure routes and effects in animal and aquatic life, and silver accumulation and effects in plants. The rationales for selecting the water quality criteria are also presented.

AOSTRA Strategic Research Program : new sucker rod pump design for sand-producing wells

By T. Sudol and R. Ridley. Edmonton : Alberta Oil Sands Information Services, 1996. 28 p. : Ill., Bibl.
MICROLOG 96-04635 (1 fiche)

To reduce the problem of sand deposition in thermal well pumping from unconsolidated reservoirs, researchers developed a novel valve design that includes a rotational circulation in the incoming fluid to enhance the near-wall velocity and sand mixing above the valve. The design principle has been extended to all fluid passages throughout the pump, including the plunger exit. This paper reviews factors affecting sand settling in sucker rod pumps and compares the new design to the standard pump valve design. It then presents results of a test program to evaluate the effectiveness of the new design in preventing sand settling. The results also compare sand deposition using the new design and standard American Petroleum Institute valves.

Assesses the relevance of European silviculture practices, and some American precedents and practices, for British Columbia conditions. The assessment is based on a survey of the literature and on several visits to Europe. Some fundamental differences in the forests, forest use, and regulating controls are identified. European practices are based on over 100 years of work and tend to be very traditional, but are also subject to contemporary environmental criticism; features of the different silviculture systems (selection cutting, shelterwood system, coppicing, seed tree system, clear-cutting) are discussed and comments are made on the scientific basis for silvicultural systems research. Concludes with discussion of the relevancy of European guidelines for silviculture principles and nature conservation, and their suitability as a model for Canadian silviculture prescriptions intended to meet multi-use objectives.

Ce document vise à mesurer différents aspects de l'évolution du marché du travail ressentie au sein de l'économie canadienne depuis 1970. Les discussions sur la capacité de l'économie à s'adapter au changement souffrent d'un manque de données sur l'ampleur des changements survenus dans le passé. L'étude présentée dans ce document tente de combler cette lacune en permettant l'examen de trois ensembles distincts de mesures du changement et des liens existant entre eux. Le premier ensemble de mesures vise à déterminer l'ampleur des mutations de l'emploi d'une branche d'activité à l'autre. Le deuxième ensemble comprend des mesures de l'évolution de l'emploi permettant d'évaluer la croissance ou la diminution de l'emploi attribuable à des variations des niveaux de l'emploi chez les producteurs. Le troisième ensemble de mesures porte sur le nombre de départs de travailleurs. CA DE LA SS

Representativeness is often identified as a criterion for ecological studies and assessments of parks and reserve networks. In this report, an assessment was made of the environmental representativeness of forest plot data from a number of Forest Ecosystem Classification and Growth and Yield surveys in Ontario. The researchers examined the frequency distribution of the survey plots in terms of selected climatic, soil, and topographic gradients. In addition, they evaluated the distributions of plots against site regions and new climatic classifications (or regionalisations) that were generated for the province. Undersurveyed climatic domains were identified and recommendations are included regarding the design and location of future Forest Ecosystem Classification and Growth and Yield survey plots. Summarises a study conducted to compare tailings reprocessing technologies with tailings management practices at three sites in New Brunswick with large amounts of sulphide tailings that represent a potential environmental hazard. Describes each site studied, reviews the management and reprocessing options, presents the comparative evaluation, and discusses alternative mechanisms for funding costs of tailings treatment in perpetuity, and stabilisation or reclamation of tailings, once the mine ceases production. The management options include flooding the tailings, installing protective vegetative cover, installing a tailings cap, and treatment of tailings runoff; the processing options involve upgrading the tailings using proven mineral processing techniques, including pyrometallurgical, flotation, and leaching methods, to produce a saleable concentrate or at least a concentrate that can be disposed at reasonable cost. Tailings accumulated at three New Brunswick mines are inherently problematic with respect to acid generation as a result of the potential for oxidation of sulphide minerals contained in the tailings, particularly pyrite, upon exposure to weathering. The presence of thiosalts in mill process water is another source of acidity. This report evaluates and compares tailings management practices and options at the three mines (Brunswick Mining and Smelting, Heath Steele Mines, and East-West Caribou Mining). Practices reviewed include subaqueous deposition, installation of saturated or unsaturated covers, treatment of tailings water, and revegetation. Two tailings management options are recommended on the basis of technical performance. The appendix contains mineral processing flowsheets for the mines studied. AP EV NR PR SC

Options examined included roasting, smelting, leaching and refining, and biological treatments. It then identifies the best potential processes applicable to the New Brunswick tailings and compares some pyrometallurgical and hydrometallurgical options, including conceptual flowsheets and estimates of costs and revenues. Finally, the report assesses the present and future potential for sale or disposal of the products and by-products from the chosen processes. The appendix includes an overview of mass balances and various scales of operations for tailings treatment; describes alternative competing treatments; and provides a table showing the market outlook for base metals and by-products. The standing tree debarking system (STDS) consists of a tree-climbing delimber/debarker machine and a hand-held debarking machine. The tree-climbing machine is powered by a chain saw engine which, through a hydraulic system, operates a delimbing saw on ascent and a debarker on descent. The hand-held machine consists of a debarking head that replaces the cutter on a gasoline-powered brush saw. Prototypes of the STDS have been developed for mechanical removal of bark from standing lodgepole pine trees that have been attacked by the mountain pine beetle (Dendroctonus ponderosae). This paper presents results of work conducted to ascertain the potential effectiveness of the STDS (the degree of bark disruption required to prevent mountain pine beetle from producing increased numbers of new beetles in infested trees of various size), the degree of bark disruption by the STDS, and brood survival in patches of bark remaining after STDS treatment.

Avant 1880, le bison nord-américain était la source de nourriture la plus abondante pour tous les habitants du Sud du Manitoba. Ils étaient très nombreux et ils fournissaient les matériaux nécessaires à la confection de vêtements, d'outils et d'abris. Ils ont bien mérité leur place d'honneur sur les armoiries du Manitoba. Ce document porte sur les bisons disparus du Manitoba. On y examine les révélations des fossiles, l'écologie à l'époque des premiers bisons, la chasse au bison dans le Manitoba d'autrefois, et la disparition des premières espèces de bison.

Ce document tente de déterminer la nature et l'étendue des bons et des mauvais emplois et du déclin de la classe moyenne sur le marché du travail canadien. L'analyse couvre la période allant de 1967 à 1986, que nous avons divisée en trois parties, chacune correspondant à un chapitre particulier de l'histoire économique récente du Canada. La première, les années 1967 à 1973, retrace la fin du long boom économique d'après-guerre, qui symboliquement s'est terminé avec le premier choc pétrolier de l'OPEP, en 1973. La deuxième partie, qui va de 1973 à 1981, couvre les années de "stagflation", celles de la montée du chômage, de l'inflation, du ralentissement de la productivité et de la baisse des taux de croissance des salaires réels.

The evaluation consisted of detailed geological mapping of the waste piles and the exposed quarry walls. Subsequently, the waste piles were trenched and four drill holes were cored into the bedrock. The holes were drilled to test for the effects of weathering and the degree of fracturing and jointing present, and to determine the potential for dimension stone production. The report includes estimates of the volumes of stone present in the waste piles suitable for various commercial purposes and makes recommendations regarding commercialisation of the property. Appendices include field descriptions and drill hole logs.

control of their justice system and reviews current initiatives in Aboriginal justice, including Aboriginal policing, indigenisation of the justice system, diversion programs and related initiatives, elder panels and sentencing circles, and initiatives in prisons. Two case studies are included for illustration of Aboriginal legal services and a holistic circle healing project. The report then considers the creation of conceptual and constitutional space for Aboriginal justice systems in Canada, reviewing tribal court experience in the United States and issues related to jurisdiction, application of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, ensuring the safety of women and children, assuring integrity of the decision-making process, appeal structures, and Aboriginal justice in urban Aboriginal communities. Finally, the report makes recommendations for reforming the existing justice system.

Presents the views of the Prince Edward Island government regarding the proposed federal legislation on reform of the Unemployment Insurance program. These views concern one specific section of the Rate of Benefits portion of the proposed legislation and its effect on the province's seasonal workers, whose pattern of employment would cause them to receive significant reductions in benefit levels and who live in areas where the local economy is insufficiently diverse to offer supplementary employment. This brief reviews the types of seasonal work found in the province, provides case studies showing earnings and benefit rates (under current unemployment insurance and under the proposed legislation), and discusses implications for the local economy, including workplace incentives and financial impacts. Concludes with a recommendation for an incremental benefit rate and an illustration of how this alternative could work.

The Land Management and Policy Branch provides greater opportunities for mineral input to land-use designations and regional planning and enables the ministry to be proactive in planning with respect to high mineral potential areas. This branch also has responsibility for enhancing mineral exploration and for developing policies for coal and minerals. The Mine Review and Permitting Branch is responsible for the development phase of mining, administering the Mine Development Assessment Process and issuing mining and reclamation permits for major coal and metal mines. This annual report provides and administrative overview of the three branches as well as a description of the operations within each of the branches.

This report reviews the Program's efforts in monitoring the recovery of aquatic ecosystems from acid pollution effects, including the use of piscivorous waterfowl as biological indicators, ecological monitoring in Ontario and Nova Scotia, the Canadian Lakes Loon Survey, biological modelling (the Waterfowl Acidification Response Modelling System and the Integrated As-

The prey sampled includes macroinvertebrates, fish, and amphibians, many of which are acid-sensitive and absent from lakes degraded by acid precipitation. The FCMP will detect changes in the composition and abundance of major prey as damaged aquatic ecosystems recover from the effects of acid precipitation as a result of emission abatement programs. The report also summarises the invertebrate, fish, and amphibian taxa collected 1987-94, along with the locations of the collections, taxonomic keys used for identification, and minimum pH at which the specimens were caught.

The Community Action Program for Children (CAPC) is a three year, federally funded project that provides programs and services in east Hamilton and Stoney Creek. Its goals are to improve the health and well being of children ages 0 to 6, work with parents to make parenting easier, and, to reduce child abuse and neglect. It is overseen by a Steering Committee composed of partner agencies and community members. During the fall of 1995, it was brought to the attention of the SPRC that funding for the 1996/97 fiscal year could be reduced. The Long Term Planning Committee designed a participatory process to ensure that decisions were made as fairly and equitably as possible, should the CAPC be reduced. This report details that process, with particular attention focused on the criteria that were used and the ranking of the seven CAPC programs and three CAPC services, which include the CAPC Administration Office, the CAPC Evaluation, and the SPRC's consultation services. Several recommendations are presented.

The proposed facility would produce about 9,300 tonnes per year (tpy) of a 43-46% tin concentrate and up to 2,200 tpy of copper concentrate and 4,800 tpy of zinc concentrate. The contractor conducted a five-month study in the Hamilton-Wentworth region, focusing on the planning, implementation, and operation of a white goods recovery/evacuation program that used two types of equipment (the Halozone Blue Bottle System and the Thermofoam OZ 4000 Saver Light recovery unit) to recover chlorofluorocarbon (CFC) refrigerants from the appliances. Three existing white good collection methods were utilised: daily curbside collection, semi-annual bulk collection, and transfer station drop-offs. Evacuation was performed by certified technicians in the home, at the transfer stations, and at the contractor's own yard. The results indicate the feasibility of implementation of a CFC evacuation/recovery program in Ontario regions, and demonstrate the most practical method to evacuate CFC-bearing white goods.

This project was designed to explore the implications of increasing linguistic and cultural diversity for policies, programs, and teaching strategies in Ontario schools. Demographic changes have brought about a situation where English as a second language (ESL) students are the majority in many urban schools. Teachers and administrators who responded to questionnaires and/or interviews noted the challenges posed by increasing diversity, including the knowledge base and attitudes of school administration and mainstream classroom teachers; inter-group relations; lack of appropriate resources for ESL students; organisational and scheduling issues; pedagogical issues; assessment and reporting of student achievement; special education assessment and placement; effects of diversity on mainstream students; core French issues; student entry characteristics; student current characteristics; home-parent communication; and teaching English to deaf students. The innovations and experience of one elementary school are reviewed as an example of directions that might be relevant for other schools facing similar challenges. Recommends a radical rethinking of mainstream educational provision in the areas of teacher education, ESL and international languages provision, and special education to ensure that the culturally diverse mainstream student population is well served in Ontario schools.

The first section establishes a philosophical approach within which to begin consideration of research ethics, and the second section establishes a framework of ethical principles considered as fundamental to the ethical conduct of research. The two subsequent sections prescribe minimal standards for the composition and operation of REBs. Sections 5 to 11 give practical guidance concerning a number of matters common to all research protocols, informed consent, privacy and confidentiality, access to personal records, continuing ethical review, conflict of interest, incentives for participation, and responsibility for adverse outcomes. Sections 12 and 13 highlight two high-priority issues: research with populations at risk of exploitation in research and research with collectivities. Section 14 reviews research outside Canada and sections 15 to 17 address human genetic research, research on human reproduction, and the use of human tissue. The final two sections provide material specific to clinical trials and quality assurance. The appendix includes sample consent forms.

Proposes a system for gauging the developmental impacts of industrial expansions or contractions that is a hybrid of two approaches: comparative equilibrium models and Lowry cycle models. In the context of the forest sector dependent communities of northern Ontario, two ratios that measure the degree of dependency of a community on its dominant industry are presented. A community impact model is also outlined and illustrated by a case study of the economic impacts of pulp and paper manufacturing in the town of Kapuskasing.

Community greenways : linking communities to country, and people to nature

Victoria : Ministry of Environment, Lands & Parks ; Ottawa : Dept. of Fisheries & Oceans, 1995. 72 p. : ill., Maps, Bibl. (Stewardship series / British Columbia and Canada) ISBN 0-7726-2678-2

Community greenways are linear green corridors that connect natural areas and are managed to help retain functioning ecological processes. Community greenways integrate ecosystem requirements into local land use planning and can include private green spaces such as agricultural land, golf courses, and railway corridors, as well as public spaces such as parks and public facilities. This publication begins with a review of successful greenways in Canada and the United States and an overview of greenways as a tool for integrating natural systems and communities. It then describes the practical benefits of community greenways, including ecosystem benefits, community lifestyle benefits, and economic value; illustrates the process used in planning greenways and suggests interdisciplinary partnerships that can refine greenway ideas and create action; reviews greenway implementation, including land tenure alternatives, land use regulations for promoting stewardship, and ideas for greenway interfaces; and addresses greenway management issues, including maintenance, risk management, and operation to maximize public enjoyment.

Conceptual alternatives for a release facility at Kenney Dam : an interim report

MICROLOG 96-04792 (1 fiche)

In January 1995, the British Columbia government announced its decision to reject the Kemano Completion Project of Alcan Aluminium Ltd. (Alcan). The province and Alcan then formed various working groups to explore solutions to handle the consequences of the decision. This document is the interim report of the group formed to examine and analyse the environmental and technical aspects, benefits, and costs of a release facility and related auxiliary works at the Kenney Dam. This facility as designed for the purpose of protection and conservation of fish resources in the context of the reduced flows which would have been released into the Nechako River under the Completion Project, not in the context of larger flows which will continue to be released as a result of the Project's cancellation. The report outlines various alternative conceptual layouts for a Kenney Dam release facility and provides a general discussion of these alternatives. After outlining a framework in which a cost-benefit analysis could be undertaken, if appropriate, the report draws preliminary conclusions regarding the alternatives.

Dans ce document, nous utilisons les données non publiées de l'enquête sur les dépenses des familles canadiennes, plus précisément celles qui se rapportent aux individus pour les années 1969 à 1982, pour estimer les profils de consommation et de revenus par âge des ménages formés de couples mariés, en portant attention à la période de transition entre le travail et la retraite. Les suppositions communes des modèles de cycle de vie à simulation numérique, les profils consommation-âge à courbes ascendantes et faibles épargnes à la retraite, ne sont pas confirmées par les faits. Il est permis de penser que la consommation de certains ménages (ménages de cols bleus) diminue de manière discontinue à l'approche de la retraite, ce qui permet de douter de la validité de l'hypothèse fréquemment posée selon laquelle l'utilité marginale de la consommation est indépendante de la quantité de loisir consommé. De plus, l'article démontre que l'incertitude du modèle du cycle de vie peu rationaliser les résultats empiriques et peut donc représenter un meilleur véhicule pour simuler les politiques.

In response to one of the recommendations of the federal/provincial/territorial task force on high risk violent offenders, a research project was undertaken to provide empirical data that would assist Crown attorneys in the application of the dangerous offender provisions. The penitentiary and court files of 64 dangerous offenders (DOs) from Ontario and British Columbia were reviewed in order to construct a comprehensive description of this group of offenders. The DOs were then compared to another high risk violent group of 34 detention failures (DFs). The British Columbia Ministry of Environment, Lands & Parks Crown land management policy has pricing as a major element. Pricing is necessary to establish the fee or rental rates charged for the use or permanent acquisition of public land. This document sets out the six fundamental principles that form the basis of Ministry pricing policy for Crown land use programs: fair return to the Crown, impartiality in terms of application and effects, comparability among and within Ministry land use programs, equity, administrative efficiency, and flexibility. The document then presents pricing policy guidelines relating to land valuation, market price determination, method of payment, form and term of tenure, and method of Crown land disposition.

Prince Edward Island National Park is a narrow coastal strip on the island's north shore, established in 1937 as a recreational seaside park. The purpose of the Park within Parks Canada's representative system plan is to protect an example of the Maritime Plain natural region, in particular the coastal barrier beaches and dune systems. The agency's ability to protect the Park's resources is being inhibited by the popularity of the beaches as recreational destinations, and the cumulative impact of visitor pressure, Park developments, and Park practices threatens the sustainability of the Park ecosystem. This study addresses the concern over cumulative environmental impacts in the Park and includes an introduction on cumulative effects assessment, an extensive literature review, and assessment of cumulative effects of previous, current, and proposed developments in the Park. The significance of the impacts on key resources is discussed and mitigation measures are suggested with regard to natural habitat, aquatic systems, flora, and fauna. Recommendations are made for preserving park habitat and establishing monitoring programs.

This study updates and extends a previous report that reviewed the economic contribution of provincial parks to the British Columbia economy. It begins with an overview of the provincial park system and presents a qualitative analysis of the recreational, conservation, and heritage benefits resulting from parks and ecological reserves. Where appropriate, specific types of social and economic benefits related to these topics are identified. It then outlines the indicators used to measure the parks' economic impacts and their associated benefits, and presents quantitative estimates of economic activity attributable to the provincial parks. The estimates are made using an input/output model that incorporates input/output data from Statistics Canada along with additional data concerning employment and tax flows from other government sources. Finally, the study forecasts future economic benefits from the provincial parks under two scenarios of potential economic activity, based on the year 2002. The appendix includes additional details on the economic measures used in the analysis.

Describes a spreadsheet-based daily simulation model for the Skeena River (British Columbia) commercial gillnet fishery. The model evaluates the effects of various gillnet fishing patterns on the catch and escapement of sockeye, steelhead (including sub-stocks), early-run coho, chinook, and pink salmon migrating through four sub-areas of the fishery. For any fishing pattern, the model predicts the daily sockeye harvest rate associated with the fishing effort and applies this rate to the abundance of salmon to calculate catch. The model uses sockeye harvest rate and effort relationships obtained from run reconstructions of 1985-91 fishery data, with a return of 2.3 million fish used as the expected sockeye run size. Run sizes for other species can be specified, or represented as proportions, for harvest rate calculations. The model allows managers to explore alternate fishing regimes before fishing actually takes place, and provides an objective framework for pre-season planning. Various simulations of the Skeena fishery are presented to illustrate use of the model.

Compares two methods of estimating body heat storage under differing conditions of clothing, training, and acclimation to heat. Six male subjects underwent eight weeks of physical training followed by six consecutive days of heat acclimation, and nine other subjects underwent corresponding periods of control observation followed by heat acclimation. Before and after each treatment, subjects walked continuously on a treadmill in a climatic chamber wearing either light normal combat clothing or protective clothing resistant to nuclear, biological, and chemical agents. Heat storage was determined calorimetrically and thermometrically, in combination with weighting factors for rectal and skin temperatures. The results indicate the relative accuracy of the two methods of measurement and suggest a way to improve the accuracy of thermometric methods of heat storage.

Developing a cultural policy for Nova Scotia, what do we believe in? A public discussion paper

This document has been prepared with input from a focus group of Nova Scotia artists, cultural administrators, arts educators, and others engaged in cultural activities, who were asked to comment on issues which could be addressed in a cultural policy for the province. The document presents a series of ideas, poses questions, and suggests principles and beliefs which could be incorporated into a cultural policy, and is intended to focus participation during public consultations. The issues considered relate to four cultural areas: the arts, cultural industries, heritage, and multicultural arts. They are arranged for discussion under two broad headings regarding the rights and well-being of all Nova Scotians, and regarding the rights and well-being of people active in cultural activities. Specific issues include the role of cultural activities in community development, the forms of cultural expression that deserve provincial support, what the cultural policy should address (such as standards, integrity, artists' rights), and whether cultural producers require leadership from the province to realise economic benefits.

Le but du projet était de développer une méthode d'inventaire d'intervention permettant d'obtenir, au moindre coût et avec une précision convenable, l'estimation des volumes sur pied ainsi que les informations minimales nécessaires à la planification des divers travaux sylvicoles en forêt feuillue. Le projet visait également à développer un logiciel permettant la saisie et la compilation de l'inventaire proposé dans la méthode. Un premier groupe de 750 placettes à rayon fixe, distribuées selon une répartition proportionnelle à la superficie des strates présentes, a été mis en place dans près de 12 000 ha de forêt. L'évaluation de la vigueur des tiges ainsi que l'estimation oculaire des produits sur pied ont été les deux principaux paramètres ajoutés à ceux déjà prévus dans les normes du Service d'inventaire forestier du ministère des Ressources naturelles du Québec. Un deuxième dispositif de 130 placettes à rayon variable, distribuées systématiquement, a été installé dans un des secteurs précédemment inventoriés et couvrant 710 ha.

MICROLOG 96-04846 (2 fiche)

Provides a quick reference to the names and addresses of people or companies who can identify British Columbia species in particular groups, and who can identify collectively many of the diverse plants, animals, protists, bacteria, and fungi found in the province's ecosystems. These experts include professional taxonomists and systematists who study and name species, as well as researchers, contractors, individuals experienced in species identification using available keys, and knowledgeable amateurs whose abilities have been recognised and recommended by professionals. Retired professionals are also listed because many are still active in their fields of work. The directory is arranged by taxa in phylogenetic order according to the five-kingdom system of higher classification. Within each taxon, lower taxa are presented in increasing order of specificity, but not lower than family level. Subgroups within each taxon are listed only if an expert is available for at least one of them. An index to major taxa is included.

A Discussion of the relationship between ownership of railcars used for grain transportation and railway freight rates for grain transportation

Travacon Research Ltd. Regina : Saskatchewan Highways & Transportation, 1996. ii, 14 p.
MICROLOG 96-04704 (1 fiche)

Presents an economic discussion of the relationship between the ownership of railway cars used for grain shipment and the levels of freight rates which would be established by the railways for transportation of currently-statutory grain, in the event that the maximum rate scale for currently-statutory grain is abolished. Begins with a review of the principles of railway freight-making and the constraints on establishment of freight rates, including availability of effective transportation competition, market competition, legislative and regulatory constraints, and Canadian railway freight rate structure. The relationship between railway freight rates and rail car ownership is then discussed. Finally, the extent to which effective competition will play a role in constraining railway freight rates is analysed in the context of the transportation of grain, a type of commodity (high-volume, heavy-loading, long-haul) for which effective competition is normally lacking. In particular, the financial impact of producer ownership of rail cars is estimated.

Display factors affecting the visibility of information on a simulated passive sonar display

By Sharon M. McFadden and Marc Zulauf. North York, ON : Defence & Civil Institute of Environmental Medicine, 1995. iv, 31 p. : ill., Bibl. (DCIEM publication / Defence & Civil Institute of Environmental Medicine (Canada) ; 95-46)

The primary medium for displaying sonar data is the cathode ray tube (CRT). To enable the sonar operator to handle typically large quantities of data, signal visibility is critical. To ensure good CRT display visibility it is necessary to understand the impact of display characteristics on the detectability of signals on a display. This study examined the effect on signal detection of rotating a frequency-time-intensity (FTI) display 90 degrees so that the signal lines fell along the CRT scan lines (currently, signal lines on an FTI display are perpendicular to the CRT raster). The effect of having signal lines fall along CRT scan lines was assessed on both monochrome and multichrome monitors and under two conditions in which the visual image was potentially degraded. In all conditions, subjects had to detect signals of varying strength presented on a simulated dynamic FTI display, updated every 5 seconds, to which signals were added.

Forecasts of inflation are an important part of the forward-looking monetary policy-making process. This paper considers a vector error-correction model (VECM) that forecasts inflation eight quarters into the future. The paper begins with an introduction discussing the measure of inflation considered, the eight-quarter inflation rate. It then provides an overview of the VECM used, a version developed by Hendry (1995) to estimate the long-run demand for M1 (currency outside banks plus demand deposits at banks). Subsequent sections examine the ability of the VECM to fit the inflation data of the past 25 years, assess the out-of-sample performance of the VECM, and provide an interpretation of the model, with reference to monetary disequilibrium (deviations of M1 from its long-run demand).

The Boreal and Taiga Plains ecoprovinces of north-eastern British Columbia are home to a group of warblers and other songbirds that are rare or unrecorded in other parts of the province. This report describes a field study conducted to map the distribution of selected species of relatively restricted warblers, vireos, and sparrows, to determine their relative abundance, and to define some of their habitat requirements. The investigators examined known locations and defined habitats in terms of major vascular plant species composition, canopy characteristics, and other features of habitat structure. By defining generalised models of bird species habitat types, new locations that corresponded to the models were then surveyed. Various habitat models were tested and they are presented as a first approximation, along with recommendations on how they may be tested and calibrated. Distribution maps for each of the selected species, based on mapping by Godfrey (1986), are presented and trends are noted in comparing current maps with Godfrey's mapping.

Before and after heat acclimation in a climatic chamber, the 16 subjects performed a heat exercise test either under control conditions wearing normal light combat clothing or wearing protective clothing resistant against nuclear, biological, and chemical agents. Criteria for halting the test exercise were a 39.3 degree C rectal temperature, a heart rate of over 95% maximum, unwillingness to continue, or elapse of 150 minutes. Ce document vise à mesurer l'effet de la rotation des usines sur la productivité dans le secteur manufacturier canadien au cours des années soixante-dix. On trouvera d'abord un résumé faisant état de la mesure dans laquelle des usines en expansion ont cédé une partie du marché à des usines en perte de vitesse. Il peut s'agir tout aussi bien d'entrées ou de sorties que de l'expansion ou de la régression d'usines qui demeurent en exploitation. On mesure en outre la productivité relative des éléments constitutifs de la rotation.

Le programme d'assurance-chômage du Canada est à la fois imposant et complexe, et il n'est pas exagéré de dire qu'il a une incidence sur le bien-être économique de presque tous les membres de la population active. Cet article vise principalement à analyser les ouvrages économiques qui étudient les effets du programme d'assurance-chômage du Canada sur le marché du travail. Nos connaissances à ce sujet ont progressé énormément depuis les dernières analyses de ce type, faites au début et au milieu des années 1980. Comme la réforme de l'assurance-chômage promet d'être une priorité importante, les décideurs et les analystes doivent avoir accès aux données les plus récentes possible des chercheurs.

Il indique de plus la mesure dans laquelle l'entrée et la sortie des établissements, et leur croissance ou leur déclin, ont fait évoluer cette efficacité. On y constate que les déterminants du roulement partagent dans une certaine mesure les mêmes caractéristiques que ceux des niveaux de l'efficacité industrielle.

This document supports the government's intent for election reform in New Brunswick. It sets out major areas for potential change for discussion by a select committee of the legislature. It identifies a number of key problem areas which have been identified from past elections and sets out possible options in a number of areas for electoral reforms. They include: the consolidation of the Elections Act and the Municipal Elections Act to create a common set of rules and procedures that would govern all provincial and municipal elections; the development of a continuous Registry of Electors that would serve for all elections and remove the necessity of a mandatory enumeration process; and, the need for changes to other general administrative procedures so as to simplify and improve the overall electoral process.

À la suite des travaux de Birch aux États-Unis, on a souvent affirmé que les petites entreprises sont à l'origine d'une grande partie des emplois créés au Canada dans les dix dernières années. Il s'ensuit naturellement les questions suivantes : qu'en est-il des emplois dans les petites entreprises comparativement aux grandes entreprises? Les travailleurs y sont-ils moins souvent syndiqués? Qu'en est-il de leur protection à l'égard de la retraite? Risquent-ils plus souvent d'être licenciés définitivement? L'un des objets de l'étude est de répondre à ces questions.

This document consolidates and analyses these reports. It consists of four chapters that present: the steps that employers took to achieve a representative workforce; economic and labour market conditions; the designated group profiles; and the assessment of employers' results. British Columbia. Office of the Auditor General. Victoria : Auditor General of British Columbia ; Deputy Ministers' Council, 1996. 88 p. ISBN 0-7726-2884-X MICROLOG 96-04989 (2 fiche)

Sets out the steps that need to be taken to reach the goal of implementing accountability for performance in the British Columbia government. It first reviews the concept of accountability for performance, the key elements of government performance, performance management, and how accountability and performance management interact. The desired state, or intended results, of implementation of accountability for performance is then outlined and an accountability framework is presented. This framework identifies: what government should be accountable for; who should be accountable for government performance; how government should be accountable for its performance, or what, how, and when information should be provided and how the credibility of this information can be assured; and how the information could be used. Finally, the report describes an implementation plan for making a shift toward performance-based accountability in both ministries and Crown corporations, and for extending the accountability initiative to funded agencies such as school boards and hospitals. Appendices include details on the desired state of performance management, detailed accountability information matrices, information on performance measurement, and a glossary.

L'analyse est axée sur

les différents modes d'entrée et de sortie. En particulier, l'entrée par acquisition et la sortie par cession sont comparées à l'entrée par ouverture d'une usine et à la sortie par fermeture d'une usine. De plus, l'importance des entrants tant l'année de leur naissance qu'au cours des années subséquentes est présentée de manière à pouvoir comparer les mesures instantanées ou à court terme et les mesures cumulatives ou à long terme de l'intensité de l'entrée et de la sortie. À cet égard, le document utilise la durée de vie, les taux de risque et la courbe de croissance des entrants.

It then reviews language use in courts of criminal jurisdiction, including amendments made to the Criminal Code which recognise the right of accused persons to be tried in either English or French; the scope of Criminal Code provisions; guidelines and policies on the manner in which language rights of the accused are recognised and respected; and language use in the provincial courts, noting the considerable differences among provinces in minority language use in criminal proceedings. Finally, the report considers courts of civil jurisdiction, including federally and provincially constituted courts, again noting differences in minority language use among the provinces. The report concludes with recommendations regarding language rights in the courts.

Estate planning is important for British Columbia family farms since farming is a particularly capital-intensive industry. Estate planning deals with all aspects of the accumulation, use, and distribution of a person's assets, and includes the provision for an orderly and equitable distribution of assets during lifetime or on death; provision of adequate retirement income; minimisation of tax; and maintenance of sufficient liquidity to pay taxes and other costs at death. This guide begins with an introduction on the basics of estate planning and on will planning. It then provides information and guidance on various aspects of estate planning and avoidance of problems that may occur. Sections of the guide cover the significance of business arrangements that may affect estate planning; the rules that relate to selling the farm during the owner's lifetime; gifts to the family; transferring the farm to the family through the will; the capital gains deduction; retirement income planning; the use of companies in estate planning; life insurance; implications of family law in estate planning; administration of the estate; and some common estate planning problems and their solutions. Appendices include a glossary, a table showing intestate succession, and examples illustrating points raised in the text.

Reports on a study which explored difficulties, problems, and possibilities for students, parents, teachers, and administrators in schools which have a substantial ethnocultural student population. Focuses particularly on ways teachers perceive and respond to cultural discontinuities which ethnocultural students experience in school. Also examines administrator, parent, and student reactions to these discontinuities, and teachers' actions in addressing value conflicts. The study was based on interviews, observations, and focus groups in two Ontario secondary schools. Findings indicate ways in which educators can help students master the curriculum, increase their life chances, and contribute to changing the structure of inequalities. Important issues covered include communication, confronting racism, developing anti-racist education, addressing stereotyping, promoting home languages and student identity, and teaching and learning. Notes that the daily choices made by teachers and administrators can enhance or hamper the success of minority students.

The purpose of this study is to devise methods for a comprehensive evaluation of commercial vehicle safety in Ontario. Specific objectives were to define what commercial vehicle safety is to mean, and to develop methods and models for tracking and projecting commercial vehicle safety as defined. The complications involved in developing a definition of safety based on collisions per kilometre led the study team to assess the specific needs of a variety of safety data users and to investigate methods of providing specific measures of safety for their objectives. The needs that were considered included vehicle and licensing control, driver control, road design and maintenance, traffic management, and public information. The study also reviewed the current sources of data for collisions, vehicle and operator populations, fitness indicators, and exposure (or vehicle usage). The final section provides the team's recommended actions which include examples of the type of publications and research that could be undertaken using existing and enhanced data.

Evaluation of the Res-Q-Air inhalation rewarming system on non-shivering hypothermic subjects

The objective of this study was to test the efficacy of inhalation rewarming (IR) in simulated field conditions using a newly developed model of non-shivering hypothermia in humans. Eight subjects, cooled in 8-10 degree C water for 25 minutes on two occasions, were injected with a shivering inhibitor, removed from the water, settled in sleeping bags, and moved to a cold chamber set at -20 degrees C for a 2.5 hour rewarming period. In the control trial, no external source of heat was available; in the other trial, IR was provided. Measurements made during the trials included oesophageal temperature and rates of rewarming. The results compare the rewarming rates and magnitude of post-exposure decrease in temperature between the control and IR trials.

This project is a collaborative field development initiative involving the OISE Midwestern Field Centre and six secondary schools in three Ontario school boards. All six schools were responding to the Ontario government's initiatives for secondary schools included in Transition Years and the Common Curriculum. Schools involved select their focus and guide their own change process with assistance from the principal investigators. The overall aim is to both investigate and support the change process experienced and employed by the participating schools. This research is contributing to a detailed, individual picture of the change efforts at each school, and insights are being gained into a number of the innovations associated with The Transition Years and the Common Curriculum. Attitudes, approaches, and concerns associated with deschooling, curriculum integration, and outcomes-based education are being extensively documented. Also examines the role of the department head in facilitating change.

Observations of harvested peatlands suggest that active steps need to be taken to encourage a return to a functional peatland ecosystem within a reasonable time frame. This report evaluates some of the techniques that could help restore the hydrology and vegetation of harvested and abandoned peatland sites. Special emphasis is given to techniques dealing with reintroducing Sphagnum species and promoting their propagation. The work also examined how some environmental factors, such as chemistry and physical conditions, may influence vegetation re-establishment on post-harvest surfaces. The experiments reported took place on two abandoned portions of the Maisonnnette and Lamèque peatlands in the Acadian Peninsula of New Brunswick. One experiment was designed to assess how an irregular microtopography, the presence of combination species, and phosphorus amendments would affect Sphagnum recolonisation success on bare peat. A second experiment tested the ability of the shredded surface vegetation layer to serve as a source of moss and vascular plant diaspores for restoration purposes, and whether straw mulch cover improves plant recolonisation success.

The main objective of this study was to evaluate the sensitivity of the steam assisted gravity drainage (SAGD) process to changes in major reservoir parameters, using a typical Athabasca reservoir as a base case. The study is intended to determine how other reservoir types might perform relative to the reservoir at the AOSTRA underground test facility. The study employed computer simulation using STARS software to examine effects of computational grid size, formation thickness, injector/producer inter-well spacing, absolute permeabilities of the reservoir, oil or water saturation, wettability, tight streaks, bottom water, formation layers, and oil viscosities. The study also examined correlations among peak oil rate, breakthrough, and formation top, and assessed possibilities of low-permeability SAGD enhancement.

This document looks at extinct bison of Manitoba. Topics covered are: the fossil record; early bison ecology; bison hunting in early Manitoba; and extinction of the early species of bison.

Identifies and assesses the following: the type and dollar value of commodities required; the extent to which the province's existing economic structure could supply those commodities; the extent to which those commodities which would otherwise be imported offered opportunities for business creation or expansion in Nova Scotia; and the potential for business creation or expansion to supply commodities that are now imported. Results are presented for labour inputs and for commodities such as machinery and equipment, business services, iron and steel products, crude stone, concrete and cement, wooden structures, ships and boats, transportation services, and spare parts. Seven relatively higher-potential opportunities and five medium-size potential opportunities for Nova Scotia business are identified. The appendix contains detailed commodity cost and source data.

Pour évaluer le processus de fusion, nous mesurons d'abord l'importance des fusions par rapport à d'autres changements survenus dans la population des entreprises manufacturières. Nous donnons un aperçu de la quantité de roulement associée aux fusions horizontales et aux fusions de diversification et comparons ce roulement à celui qui résulte de la création et de la disparition d'usines. Nous essayons de déterminer si les entreprises fusionnées et les entreprises créées ou agrandies appartiennent à la même catégorie de taille. Nous examinons l'intensité des fusions selon la branche d'activité afin d'établir si les fusions sont réparties également entre les branches. Nous étudions la question du degré de réussite des fusions en comparant la variation de la part du marché des usines fusionnées à la variation connue par les autres usines de la population. Enfin, nous nous penchons sur les conséquences que les fusions ont sur la variation de la productivité et la rentabilité. CA CO DE SS

Fuzzy classification algorithms applied to SAR images of ships (U)

By Andrew Tuttle and Robert Klepko. Ottawa : National Defence, Defence Research Establishment Ottawa, 1995. xi, 74 p. : ill., Bibl. (Technical note / Defence Research Establishment Ottawa ; 95-11) MICROLOG 96-05239 (1 fiche)

The resolution of synthetic aperture radar (SAR) images has improved such that classification of SAR-Imaged targets is possible. The ability to detect and image ships at long ranges, coupled with the abundance of images that may be acquired, has created the need for a system of automatic classification of vessels at long ranges. Several automated systems, using statistical techniques, neural networks, and expert systems, have been developed at Defence Research Establishment Ottawa to perform this function. This report documents an attempt to implement such a system using fuzzy logic methods, which are particularly adept at modelling systems which involve data sets with ill-defined categories, such as SAR images of ships. The report provides an introduction to fuzzy sets and their roles in pattern recognition research. Several fuzzy classifiers are described, and two (the fuzzy K-nearest neighbour algorithm and the fuzzy hyperboxes classifier) are tested on some simple data sets. Results are reported for testing of the classifiers in classification of actual SAR images of ships. CA ND PS SC

Describes research on the gasification of fuel derived from heterogeneous solid wastes using Biosyn fluidised-bed technology. Three types of material were used as feedstocks: mixed hardwood/softwood shavings, a mixture of wood shavings and polyethylene wastes, and a mixture of commercial waste paper, wood residues, polyethylene wastes, and compostable material. Specific research objectives included determination of yields and gas composition as a function of operating conditions, design and testing of suitable granular filter media for hot-gas filtration, and study of the feasibility of catalytic reforming of polycyclic aromatic hydrocarbons in the produced gas. Includes comparative gasification results for the three feedstocks and an economic analysis of waste-to-electricity and heat using the Biosyn technology. CA CM EN EV ND SC

This report was prepared as background for an inventory of geophysical data in New Brunswick that is being established as a digital data bank with the aid of a CARIS-based geoscience information system. It reviews the history of gravity surveys and ground magnetic surveys in the province, and the techniques used. The physical properties of rocks and minerals that are relevant to gravity and magnetic surveys are discussed as well as the filtering and linear transformation of gravity and magnetic data. Some practical applications of geophysical data in mineral exploration and geological mapping are described, including apparent-density mapping, apparent-susceptibility mapping, and ore tonnage estimation. Finally, methods for optimising geophysical data are presented. The appendix includes an index of New Brunswick gravity data and a table of rock densities and magnetic susceptibilities. AP NR PR SC

Genetic algorithms for vehicle dispatching

Proposes genetic algorithms as a means to support vehicle dispatchers in the context of a courier or express mail service. Vehicle dispatching is first modelled as a multi-attribute decision problem. A genetic algorithm is then used to find a weighting scheme for the attributes within a linear utility function, so as to best reproduce the expert's decision process. Includes numerical results for data collected from an operations day of a courier service company. Results using the professional dispatcher are compared to those using two computer-simulated experts (linear and non-linear). PR PS QU SC TR

The Ontario Geological Survey has introduced a structured, qualitative, mineral potential evaluation procedure for use in mineral resource assessments as part of multidisciplinary land use planning activities. In order to provide data on mineral potential in areas where potentially conflicting land use activities have been or may be proposed. This report documents a trial study of the procedure for the Grassy River area, about 70 kilometres south of Timmins, which has been proposed as the site of a Waterway Protected Area. The area contains 39 known mineral deposits, which along with the geochemically anomalous bedrock mineralisation represent seven different deposit types. The report reviews the geology and exploration history of the area and presents results of the mineral potential evaluation. Recommendations for exploration of the various deposit types in the area are also proposed. NR ON PR SC

Findings outline strategies used by researchers for dissemination, the degree of satisfaction of potential users with Institute research, and reasons for dissatisfaction with dissemination practices.

Presents results of an experiment conducted in artificial streams (flumes) in which the growth of periphyton (algae) was studied in relation to phosphorus concentrations in the water. The goal of the study was to determine whether periphyton growth in the Athabasca River was phosphorus limited and whether the degree of phosphorus limitation varied from a similar study conducted in fall 1993. The experimental flumes were located on site, adjacent to the Athabasca River at Hinton. The four-week experiment consisted of four treatments: a control of zero phosphorus addition and three experimental levels of 1, 10, and 25 micrograms per litre of phosphorus. Results include relative specific growth rates as indicated by measuring the build-up of chlorophyll a, the level at which growth rate saturation occurred, and phosphorus concentrations required to reach maximum biomass levels in spring. This report provides guidance and recommendations for selection of a reference toxicant, spiking procedures, and use of control sediments for assessing changes in sensitivity of test organisms to toxicants and measuring precision of both intra- and inter-laboratory spiked-sediment toxicity tests.

Four potential reference toxicants (cadmium, copper, pentachlorophenolate, and fluoranthene) were considered for selection since they were the only chemicals with published information regarding sediment spiking and use in sediment toxicity tests. The recommendations on the use of these toxicants in tests using either freshwater or marine sediment reflect the information currently available. Instructions are included for the selection of control sediments for spiking, selection and use of test organisms, acquisition and handling of chemicals, conducting reference toxicant tests, establishing and updating warning charts, record keeping, and data reporting. Key areas requiring further research are also identified. The appendices include a summary of current research on formulated sediments, a list of information typically provided in a material safety data sheet, and graphs showing the fate of copper and cadmium added to natural seawater. Après avoir pensé que l'harmonisation des taxes de vente se réaliserait, Ottawa a soudainement vu le climat se détériorer en toute fin d'année 1991, et jusqu'à tout récemment, il était évident que les probabilités que l'harmonisation des taxes provinciales et de la taxe fédérale se fasse un jour étaient très faibles. La situation est toutefois peut-être en train d'évoluer. Dans ce document, on cherche à évaluer la possibilité que dans un proche avenir, l'harmonisation des taxes de vente provinciales et de la taxe sur les produits et services se fasse.

Before the Goods and Services Tax came into effect on January 1, 1991, the provinces vigorously opposed its introduction and the idea of harmonizing it with their own respective retail sales taxes. They accused the federal government of encroaching on the area of consumption taxes, which they considered to come within exclusively provincial jurisdiction. Moreover, it made sense for the provinces to avoid associating themselves with the federal government on the GST, given the political price that would have to be paid at election time for introducing such a very unpopular tax. This document attempts to assess the likelihood of such harmonization in the near future.

Nous montrons ensuite qu'au cours de la dernière décennie, l'inégalité dans la répartition des heures de travail hebdomadaire s'est accrue chez les hommes et que, pour les deux sexes, la semaine normale de travail a perdu de l'importance. Dans la section 3, nous étudions en détail la diminution de l'importance relative de la semaine normale de travail. Des explications possibles de la dispersion croissante du nombre d'heures de travail hebdomadaire sont présentées dans la section 4. Finalement, nous terminons l'étude par un résumé des résultats suivi de la conclusion.

In 1992, Alberta Health commissioned the Population Research Laboratory (PRL) to include questions on the Alberta Survey concerning self-assessed HIV infection (AIDS) risk, knowledge about HIV/AIDS, the use of condoms in preventing HIV/AIDS, and HIV testing. The survey gathered information necessary to estimate self-assessed risk among a representative sample of Alberta adults and to describe those who reported themselves to be at risk. Respondents to the survey were also asked several questions concerning their knowledge about HIV/AIDS (visual detection, prevention), in order to assess the level of HIV/AIDS knowledge among the general public, and particularly those at risk of HIV/AIDS. It sought more detailed information about reported HIV testing among the general population and about condom use. This report seeks to provide information necessary to assist in the development of public policy, programs and services for the general Alberta population and for persons with HIV/AIDS.

As the population and the health care environment is changing, the Program faces a need for reform. This document begins with a review of the six major challenges facing Home Care reform, along with reform recommendations articulated by an advisory committee. The document then presents a table of 22 issues and problems related to the current Home Care system, the impact of these issues, values to be reflected in any reform, and recommendations relevant to each issue. Finally, the document provides comments, questions, and recommendations related to the proposed strategic redirection of Home Care.

Adequate, secure shelter is considered basic to human and social health and development. It was estimated in 1986 that over one billion of the world's inhabitants did not have access to adequate housing; of those, a hundred million had substandard shelter or no shelter at all. In Canada, estimates of people who had substandard or no shelter in 1986 were between 130,000 and 250,000. This document discusses defining homelessness, counting the homeless, the composition of the homeless, the shortage of affordable housing, and responses to homelessness.

Describes a study that collected real data on time and movement during evacuation drills in three high-rise buildings located in Montreal, Calgary, and Gloucester (Ontario). The different locations reflected provincial variations in fire safety procedures. Before evacuation drills in two of the buildings, researchers met with residents identified as having some limitations to discuss their knowledge of the building evacuation procedures and their ability to participate in the drill. During each drill, data were gathered concerning the following: the time to respond to the alarm, the direction of movement, the time for the occupants (including the disabled and elderly) to reach a safe area, the overall evacuation behaviour of disabled and other occupants, and the time to evacuate the whole building. Video camera data on occupant movements and fire alarm audibility data were also recorded. After each drill, questionnaires distributed to participants asked them about alarm audibility and about their actions during the drill. Statistical analyses compared the buildings and assessed the impact of gender, age, and physical limitation on evacuation performance. Recommendations on fire alarms and evacuation procedures are also included. The appendix contains a copy of the post-drill questionnaire and a fire safety guide for apartment managers.

The subsequent chapters describe the collective self-help process step by step, including the basic self-help concept, assembling a core group, conducting a feasibility study, estimating costs, planning the project, carrying out the development stage (including financing, permit approvals, design, and construction management), the construction process, completion and occupancy, and operation of the finished project. This paper is intended to initiate a public consultation process involving provincial, regional, and municipal governments, interest groups, and private citizens in British Columbia regarding the development of an integrated bear-human conflict management strategy. It begins with an overview of the origins of bear-human conflict and the costs of such conflict, such as the need to kill or translocate bears who become problems, bear attacks, lost hunter opportunity, and deaths of bears conditioned to eating non-natural foods. The paper then examines various approaches to address the conflict problem: reactive approaches including translocation and aversive conditioning, and preventive approaches including garbage management and electric fencing. As the effectiveness of any solutions depends on public awareness and involvement, the paper also discusses the need for public education about the bear-human conflict problem, research on bear-human conflict, and new legislation to deal with activities that lead to bear-human conflicts.

This study sought to identify successful models of strategies that encouraged female students to consider and enter non-traditional co-operative programs, emphasising needs of Aboriginal and minority women; to identify key elements in the models so that school boards without programs or fully developed programs will be able to use the successful elements in their planning; and to disseminate results to a broad range of potential participants, policy analysts, and program delivery staff through a variety of media. Essential questions were: how female students were recruited to the programs; what were the most common problems they identified; what kinds of support female students need to enter technological studies and occupations; how success was evaluated; and what kinds of programs employers felt that co-operative programs should offer to make female students more employable in non-traditional jobs. Notes the research findings on the relation between traditional attitudes supporting sex-role stereotyping in society and the identification of careers as being male or female, leading to devaluation of women's work. Discusses the need for extensive teacher awareness training, integrating equity issues into the curriculum, and identifying female learning styles.

Improved boundary element methods for predicting sectional hydrodynamic coefficients for strip theory ship motion programs

Presents two improved boundary element methods for predicting hydrodynamic coefficients of two-dimensional sections, in the context of predicting motions and loads of ships in waves. The first is a source distribution method, while the second is a direct method for determining velocity potential. A major objective of these improved methods is to eliminate errors due to irregular frequencies, which currently exist in the close-fit method used by the strip theory program SHIPMO. To eliminate irregular frequencies of surface-piercing sections, the source distribution method employs additional sources on a deck lid at the waterline. The introduction of a deck lid eliminates some irregular frequencies but introduces new irregular frequencies, which are effectively eliminated by the modified direct method. Low and high frequency limits of hydrodynamic coefficients are also reviewed.

Describes development work carried out to extend the previously developed prediction methods and associated computer code for the solution of the linear time domain hydrodynamic ship motion problem. The previous methods and code were restricted to head sea conditions, and the work reported extends these to include following sea conditions. Presents the theoretical methods used to determine the impulse response functions associated with the incident wave pressures and velocities and the diffracted and Froude-Krylov wave forces under following sea conditions. Also reviews computer code improvements incorporated in the latest work, including improvement in the static equilibrium calculation routine, provision of an improved hull panning scheme and transom panning procedure, and reduction in storage requirements. Presents validation studies to examine the performance of the improved hull motion prediction procedures. Both measured and predicted hull motion data for three widely differing hull forms are com-

Les écarts dans l'état de santé des individus, selon leur catégorie salariale et leur situation socio-économique, suscitent beaucoup d'intérêt. Au Canada, de même que dans un grand nombre d'autres pays, les signes d'une telle disparité sont multiples. Cette étude est une analyse de la mortalité chez les hommes de 65 à 74 ans en fonction des revenus provenant d'un emploi et de ceux d'un travail indépendant gagnés pendant une période de 10 à 20 ans avant l'âge de 65 ans, ainsi que de l'état civil de l'âge à la retraite. Cette analyse se fonde sur les données administratives du Régime de pensions du Canada, portant sur plus d'un demi-million d'individus. On rencontre des variations notables du taux de mortalité à tous les paliers de revenus ainsi que dans un contexte multidimensionnel. Les résultats illustrent le potentiel considérable des données administratives sur le plan de la recherche et soulèvent d'importantes questions quant aux politiques en matière de santé et de pensions.

Cette étude examine les différences entre les politiques et les activités mises en œuvre par les petites et les moyennes entreprises qui sont les plus prospères et celles qui sont les moins prospères. L'activité innovatrice est le facteur le plus déterminant du succès global. Presque toutes les questions portant sur les stratégies d'innovation reçoivent des scores plus élevés de la part du groupe d'entreprises plus prospères et moins élevés de la part du groupe moins prospères. Les résultats sont également plus élevés en ce qui concerne les activités innovatrices (si une entreprise possède une unité de R&D, ses dépenses en R&D par rapport à son investissement total et le ratio de la R&D aux ventes sont liés à la réussite).

The purpose of this study was to determine whether the tourism products offered by Manitoba parks and historic sites matched the interests of major international tourist markets. The study includes a complete description of the products and services of 16 sites, including national parks, heritage rivers, museums, heritage parks, and historic sites. It then provides a market analysis, reviewing Canada's and Manitoba's performance in attracting international visitors and analysing major market segments identified as appropriate for the products under study. Statistics on tourism and travel trends are included. Potential market segments are studied on the basis of their current usage and potential interest in the types of products and experiences offered. The final sections of the study summarise tour operator surveys and focus group discussions conducted as part of the study, and present recommendations and an action plan.

An Introduction to pollution prevention planning for major industrial operations in British Columbia

Victoria : BC Environment, 1996. 12 p. : ill.
MICROLOG 96-04845 (1 fiche)

BC Environment is developing a more flexible regulatory system that involves eliminating end-of-pipe permits and replacing them with regulations and pollution prevention plans. The province's pollution prevention planning process uses the pollution prevention hierarchy (avoidance, elimination, substitution, or reduction of polluting products; reduction and elimination of polluting by-products, reuse and recycling of by-products, and energy recovery; and treatment or containment of residuals), integrates community and employee ideas into the planning process, and establishes long-term environmental authorisations. This document introduces the province's pollution prevention planning policies for industrial operations and includes a list of the benefits of pollution prevention and an outline of how to obtain a pollution prevention environmental authorisation.

Filter debris analysis (FDA) is a condition monitoring technique that involves periodic removal of debris collected by in-line filters and subsequent examination of the debris for the presence of metallic wear particles. The quantity and morphology of these particles are used to assess internal component wear in the system being examined. This report details a study on the selection and evaluation of quantitative screening methodologies for FDA. Two methods were evaluated using both prepared samples and debris from helicopter gearbox filter backwashings: discrete counting of ferromagnetic particles using a MetalSCAN sensor and quantification of the total mass of magnetic debris by magnetic separation and weighing. Test results using the two methods were compared to each other and to a visual rating of filter patches.

Studies the effect of uncertainty on an entrepreneur who must choose the capacity of his business before knowing the demand for his product. The unit profit of operation is known with certainty but there is no flexibility in the one-period framework. The paper shows how the introduction of global uncertainty reduces the investment of the risk-neutral entrepreneur and, even more, that of the risk-averse one. It also shows how marginal increases in risk reduce the optimal capacity of both the risk-neutral and risk-averse entrepreneur without any restriction on the concave utility function and with limited restrictions on the definition of a mean preserving spread. These general results are explained and compared with those in the two literatures on price uncertainty and demand uncertainty.

Stand density manipulation offers the greatest control over the growth and development of even-aged stands, and the most effective silvicultural means of alleviating short- to medium-term wood supply gaps. Density management diagrams (DMDs) are practical tools showing how average diameter, height, density, and volume change over time for even-aged pure species stands. This paper describes some basic concepts behind DMDs and presents the first approximation of a jack pine DMD developed in large part from northern Ontario data. The paper discusses field procedures for using the DMD and includes examples showing how the diagram can be used for developing stand-level crop planning strategies.

Occurrences of juvenile firesetting are a significant problem, posing a serious potential for loss of life, injury, or property damage. This manual is intended to provide fire departments and other interested agencies with a simple and consistent program to address this problem. It begins with profiles of the two basic types of juvenile firesetters (the curiosity seeker and the deliberate firesetter), illustrated by case studies. It then describes an interview process designed to gather information about the firesetting child, the family, and the firesetting incident. Subsequent sections present a preventive fire safety educational program aimed at reducing incidents of firesetting, information on building a problem referral network within the community, and on program follow-up and firesetter record-keeping. A list of educational resource material on fire and life safety, sample case studies of juvenile firesetters, and firesetter interview forms are also included.

The studies cover rural labour, labour law and its institutions, forestry workers, religion and leisure and their relation to working class identity, railway labour and management, the home as a workplace, and factory workers. The studies illustrate the process of class formation, the nature and meaning of work, labour relations, and the unresolved contrast between the evidence of economic growth and the evident persistence of hardship and deprivation in late 19th-century Ontario.

The experiments tested carbon dioxide and neodymium-YAG lasers in removing polyurethane topcoat and epoxy primer from coated components made from Kevlar, graphite epoxy composite, thin section aluminium alloy, and magnesium alloy. The second part evaluated two types of sensors used for monitoring the paint removal process: a system that monitored reflected light from the surface at various stages in the de-coating process, and an image analysis system capable of distinguishing between coated and Reviews 1993-94 activities in a project designed to extend research on administrative expertise. Specific aims are to situate the study of administrative expertise within a single, although broad and critical, problem domain; to identify a sample of exemplary leadership practices associated with central sub-problems in that domain, such as fostering teacher development; to explore the cognitive processes which give rise to such exemplary practices; and to inquire about the problem-solving processes that appear to lead to transformational leadership practices, a form of leadership particularly helpful for school restructuring. Unlike typical improvement initiatives of the past, school restructuring efforts usually address failure to alter power relationships in schools and failure to act on a conception of schools as a complex system. This project examines the role of school leadership in addressing these concerns. The year's studies were conducted to identify processes which account for variation in the progress of school restructuring efforts, and to describe school-level leadership practices which contribute significantly to such efforts.

Examines findings from the second year of a three-year study to investigate what the narratives of Black/African-Canadian students can tell researchers about the influence of race/ethnicity, class, gender, power, and social structures on dropping out of school. By the end of the project's second year, interviews had taken place with 65 students, 21 dropouts, over 30 Black parents, caregivers and community workers, over 40 teachers, and over 50 non-Black students. Preliminary analysis suggests the students' views of dropping out as both a response and a solution to lived experience. Highlights Black students' concerns about race, representation, and identity in schooling and education. Black parents also suggest ways to make public schooling more responsive to student needs and aspirations. Teacher and administrator views are also reported regarding the role and responsibilities of families, government, and school boards.

Nous utilisons ici deux sources de données relativement nouvelles pour étudier 1) la variation des mises à pied permanentes pendant le cycle d'affaires, avant tout afin de déterminer leur importance lors des périodes d'expansion lorsque la baisse de la demande globale ne joue pas un grand rôle dans le processus de mise à pied 2) où les mises à pied permanentes se concentrent dans l'économie au cours des périodes d'expansion, lorsque les restructurations et le jeu de la concurrence sont les causes principales des mises à pied, et 3) l'expérience sur le marché du travail des travailleurs déplacés après la mise à pied.

Dans ce document, nous visons à faire le point sur la Loi canadienne sur la santé dans ce contexte de réforme. Nous ne proposons aucune interprétation juridique de la Loi; nous cherchons plutôt à rendre compte de l'évolution de celle-ci et à examiner ses perspectives d'avenir. Dans la première partie, nous rappelons sommairement les raisons qui justifient l'intervention gouvernementale dans le secteur de la santé, tandis que dans la deuxième nous décrivons les rôles respectifs du gouvernement fédéral et des provinces dans ce domaine. Dans la troisième partie, nous retraçons brièvement l'histoire de la Loi, et dans la quatrième, nous présentons un aperçu des normes et conditions qui se rattachent à celle-ci et les décrivons succinctement. Dans la cinquième partie, nous traitons des sanctions prévues dans le cas des manquements à la Loi, et dans la sixième et dernière, nous énumérons un certain nombre d'options visant à maintenir ou à améliorer la Loi.

The long-term care system in Saskatchewan has developed in a piecemeal fashion over the past 30 years, and lack of co-ordination in the long-term sector has resulted in an excessive and costly dependence on institutional care. This report presents a review of the province's long-term health care system, including comparisons with other provinces, and describes four research studies of the system. The first study examined the relationship between the number of people living in institutional care within each home care district and variables such as the number of available institutional beds, seniors housing supply, and use of home care services. The second compared 1,725 clients assessed as level 2 on admission to home care with 451 level 2 clients admitted to institutional care during 1991-92, to identify any differences between the groups. The third examined the probabilities of 14,000 home care clients being admitted to institutional long-term care during the year. The final study examined client characteristics affecting the length of time spent on a priority waiting list before being admitted to institutional care. The report concludes with recommendations for establishing a continuum of care, improved assessment and classification, improved community-based care, and funding.

Background to the analysis includes an overview of the constitutional development of the European Union, the development of the Winnipeg Principles, and the manner in which the environment is taken into account by the Treaty and the European Community. The analysis reveals the degree of convergence between European Union practice and the Winnipeg Principles. Major problems in addressing areas covered by the Principles are identified and steps taken to resolve the problems are noted.

Dans la première section de cet article, nous décrivons le processus de classement utilisé pour créer la série officielle. La deuxième section expose à grands traits trois méthodes pour prolonger des classifications d'industries. Dans la troisième section, nous évaluons ces méthodes en les appliquant à un reclassement des établissements manufacturiers qui ont déclaré des données détaillées sur les produits en 1982, puis en comparant les résultats à la série officielle pour cette année-là. En 1982, les données avaient été recueillies selon la CAE de 1970, mais avaient été publiées selon les deux classifications. Dans la quatrième section, nous examinons une méthode qui n'a pas rapport aux classifications d'industries, soit l'agrégation. C'est une méthode qui est facile à appliquer mais son principal inconvénient est de définir des industries qui ne sont pas aussi reconnues que celles de la CTI.

En d'autres termes, il s'agit d'un moyen de fixer des objectifs dans le but d'améliorer sensiblement les méthodes de travail de l'entreprise. Ce document offre une foule de renseignements afin d'aider les cadres d'entreprises canadiennes à amorcer l'évaluation et le perfectionnement de leurs méthodes. Il cherche à combler une lacune. Il suggère des façons pratiques d'effectuer une analyse comparative en faisant précisément référence à l'industrie du vêtement. Les méthodes qui y sont décrites permettront aux dirigeants de l'industrie canadienne d'élaborer et de mener à bien des projets d'analyse et, ainsi, d'améliorer constamment leurs façons de faire.

Cette communication cherche à déterminer dans quelle mesure l'importance observée des barrières à l'entrée dépend de la façon dont l'entrée est mesurée. A cette fin, on évalue jusqu'à quel point les techniques d'estimation, la spécification du modèle et les mesures modifient la conclusion selon laquelle l'entrée est entravée par certaines caractéristiques structurelles de l'industrie. L'article est structuré de la façon suivante. La section 2 présente une analyse des problèmes propres à la mesure de l'entrée. La section 3 décrit le modèle faisant l'objet d'une estimation et les variables explicatives utilisées. La section 4 présente à la fois des modèles traditionnels et des modèles de dénombrement relatifs à l'entrée, et examine leurs méthodes d'estimation. La section 5 présente une comparaison des résultats pour différentes périodes et différentes unités de mesure. Enfin, la section 6 énonce les conclusions de l'article.

Il s'inscrit dans une série de documents qui portent sur la dynamique du changement dans l'industrie canadienne. Il explique d'abord comment la recherche qui comporte différents objectifs peut nécessiter différentes mesures. Il examine ensuite le choix de la période, la définition de l'industrie et les catégories d'entrée. Il donne ensuite un aperçu général des bases de données ainsi qu'une définition des catégories d'entrée et de sortie réellement utilisées. Finalement, on étudie en détail les problèmes posés par la mise en application.

A Statistique Canada, on a intégré des caractéristiques de santé et des facteurs de risque à un modèle démographique de la population active canadienne. Dans cet article, nous décrivons une méthode permettant de calculer des probabilités de transition multidimensionnelles utilisées dans la simulation de cycles de vie d'individus. En fait, l'article met en évidence des techniques grâce auxquelles un modèle de microsimulation dynamique fondé sur des données transversales produit néanmoins des microdonnées longitudinales ajustées réalistement.

Fishing selectivity can be defined as the ability to target and capture fish by species, size, or sex (or a combination of these) during harvesting operations, allowing all incidental by-catch to be released unharmed. This manual outlines the steps and processes necessary to monitor selectivity demonstrations, collect data on selectivity, and validate scientific research on selectivity under normal fishing operations. Some mathematical and statistical examples are shown to clarify the methodologies and to facilitate understanding and application. The manual is intended to provide assistance to technicians and senior fishing crew in the planning, execution, and reporting of size and species trials and demonstrations with mobile and fixed gears. Sections of the manual cover measurement of selectivity, experiment design, experimental methods, data analysis, and the reporting of results. Case studies of experiments using both fixed and mobile gear are included.

Le roulement des entreprises résulte de l'entrée et de la sortie des entreprises de même que de l'expansion et de la régression des entreprises qui continuent d'exister. Dans ce document on élabore des mesures du changement dans la population des entreprises existant déjà dans le secteur et on les compare au processus d'entrée et de sortie. On cherche à déterminer si des niveaux élevés de roulement par entrée ou par sortie sont associés à des niveaux élevés de roulement chez les entreprises qui continuent d'exister et l'on se demande si l'un de ces processus ne serait pas simplement le prolongement de l'autre.

Multi-element analysis of altered and mineralised rock samples from the Riley Brook area in New Brunswick can be used to identify rock units that may host economic deposits of base metal sulphides. This publication contains a complete dataset of multi-element analyses carried out in conjunction with geological mapping in the Riley Brook area, including analyses of samples collected in the vicinity of the Sewell Brook and Shingle Gulch prospects. The data are presented in the form of tables of analyses of 30 elements and also as page-sized maps showing concentrations of eight selected elements (gold, silver, arsenic, antimony, copper, mercury, lead, and zinc).

The accelerated mortar bar test was developed in South Africa and has been adopted in North America for the rapid identification of potentially alkali-silica reactive aggregates. The purpose of this study, involving 46 laboratories, was to obtain data to develop a multi-laboratory precision statement for the test. The aggregate used in the study was a Spratt siliceous limestone from an Ottawa quarry and represents one of the most expansive alkali-silica aggregates in Canada. Each laboratory received a specimen of cement, a sample of aggregate, a copy of the test procedure, and forms for recording expansion data, equipment details, and laboratory conditions. The laboratories were asked to record average (3 bars) expansion at ages of 7, 13, 14, 15, 21, and 28 days in sodium hydroxide solution. Results and discussion of the statistical analysis of the laboratory tests are presented, showing the coefficient of variation among laboratory results when laboratories used the same cement and when they used their own cement.

Addresses the consequences of gender inequities in texts and curriculum material by making research on women available to teachers through computer networking. Priorities addressed were changing curriculum practices that contribute to racial and gender inequity, and disseminating the results of educational research effectively to practitioners. Activities included computer conferencing, and researching material for networking, workshops, and document sets. Dissemination took place through computer conferencing, class presentation, and the participation of the project co-ordinator in conferences and television panels. Document sets will make the results of this project available on a wider basis. Each set contains some or all of the following: an introductory essay, articles, illustrations, annotated bibliography and filmography, suggested activities, and ideas for research. The work responded to teachers' expressed needs for practical resources that support an equitable learning environment.

Nous avons inclus de nombreux résultats de travaux précédents sur les investissements à l'étranger, particulièrement aux États-Unis. Nous constatons, par exemple, une associa-

Nous traitons aussi de l'influence de certaines des caractéristiques de l'économie canadienne, l'importance de la propriété étrangère notamment, qui sont susceptibles d'influer sur le fait qu'une entreprise est ou n'est pas une multinationale.

This report describes the methods used to construct the spatial ecological framework, the concepts of the hierarchical levels of generalisation (ecozones, ecoregions, and ecodistricts), their linkages to various resource data sources, and some examples of applications of the framework. The bulk of the report consists of descriptions of the 217 ecoregions that make up Canada's 15 ecozones. These descriptions provide general comments about the climatic, physical, and biological properties of each ecozone and ecoregion, and include comments about unique features or those that help to distinguish adjacent ecoregions, where possible.

However, it provides the government and the public with a clearer understanding of demographics, and how demographic changes are reshaping the province in which we live. It will further attempt to define the implications surrounding the application of such options. The uncertainty of how much the population will decline or increase in the next decade and beyond will make it difficult to provide precision to the issues we face. This document only tries to treat these as potential implications.

New health care initiatives : report on a qualitative exploration of alternative positionings

Emmerson & Ware Ltd. Halifax : Dept. of Health & Fitness, 1990. iv, 33 p.
MICROLOG 96-04968 (1 fiche)

Presents results of research conducted to determine how best to position the communication of new health care initiatives to the general population of Nova Scotia. The research methodology consisted of a series of focus group sessions that initially focused on current attitudes toward the province's health care system and on the directions that participants would like to see it take in the future. The focus groups were then asked to discuss three suggested positionings that the Dept. of Health and Fitness might adopt. These positionings were presented in the form of scripted audiotaped interviews. Some of the specific questions to be answered were: what is the most acceptable positioning; what is the most persuasive positioning; how people feel about public participation in the health care system; and how receptive are they to the longer-term goal of making them understand and accept the necessity of the proposed changes. The appendix contains the scripts of the three interviews.

Presents a neural network-based optimisation algorithm to solve an open-loop resource allocation problem. The approach used is well suited to represent the structure of the model in which the occurrence of asynchronous outcome and decision events are explicitly incorporated. Mainly inspired from the principles of Hopfield neural networks, the algorithm computes a near-optimal solution to the illuminator scheduling problem while maintaining constraint satisfaction to support weapon-target allocation. A computational experiment conducted within the context of naval anti-air warfare shows the strengths and weaknesses of the proposed method over an alternate greedy technique.

Ontario experiences rutting problems on major highways, and investigations have consistently showed that there are deficiencies in the binder course mixes, leading to plastic flow and instability/rutting. This paper describes the progression and refinements made to heavy duty binder course mixes, based on the experiences gained during the past few years from a review of other agencies' specifications, laboratory studies using a wheel tracking machine and characterisation testing, dedicated field trials, and data analyses. The major emphasis of the evaluations was on the effect of stone content on the constructability and rutting resistance of heavy duty binder course mixes, although other attributes such as natural sand content, air voids, stability, compactability, lift thickness, and segregation were also evaluated. Recommendations are provided regarding the criteria for constructable & rut-resistant heavy duty binder course mixes used in highway construction.

Presents a constraint logic programming model for the travelling salesman problem with time windows. The model yields an exact branch-and-bound optimisation algorithm without any restrictive assumption on the time windows. The algorithm presented does not suffer from the space complexity issues affecting dynamic programming approaches, whose performance relies heavily on the degree of discretisation applied to the data. The data-driven mechanism at the core of the algorithm more fully exploits pruning rules developed in operations research by using them not only a priori but also dynamically during the search. Computational results are reported and comparisons are made with both exact and heuristic algorithms.

The Other Story project was designed to develop inclusive curriculum that introduces the perspective of various world cultures into issues covered in current curriculum guidelines. It is a telecommunications project that links schools across Ontario in a conference to discuss issues of development and culture from different perspectives. People from the cultures being studied participate both in the curriculum development and in the computer conference discussion. The project objectives are to develop activity-based materials that would enhance teachers' and students' knowledge base of other cultures at the senior level; and to conduct research into students' anti-racist thinking through classroom observation and textual analysis of on-line conferences. It also intends to conduct research in teachers' in-service needs in anti-racist education, and to develop materials for critical thinking, co-operative learning, and the evaluation of students' ability to think critically. In the first year, four schools and five classrooms from one school board participated in the pilot run of the Other Story conference. Includes conference materials.

When Canada extended jurisdiction over fisheries in 1977 and created a 200-mile Exclusive Fishing Zone, three areas of the continental shelf remained largely beyond Canadian control: the northeastern portion of the Grand Bank, the southeastern portion, and the outcropping of the shelf east of the Bank. This document looks at overfishing outside the 200-mile limit in the Atlantic Coast.

Overnight rate innovations as a measure of monetary policy shocks in vector autoregressions

By Jamie Armour, Walter Engert and Ben S. Fung. Ottawa : Bank of Canada, 1996. iv, 55 p. : ill., Bibl. (Working paper / Bank of Canada ; 96-4 ISSN 1192-5434) ISBN 0-662-24296-3 MICROLOG 96-05092 (1 fiche)

Examines the Bank of Canada's overnight rate as a measure of monetary policy in vector autoregression (VAR) models. To obtain a sufficiently long period of data, the authors splice the Bank's current measure of the overnight rate (which began in 1971) with day loan rate observations. The resulting data series extends back to the 1950s. Begins by explaining the attractiveness of operational measures of monetary policy actions and a discussion of the nature of the Bank's operating framework, then considers the evolution of the overnight market in Canada. Subsequent sections discuss the identification of monetary policy shocks with VAR-based techniques and examine the different ways in which the spliced overnight rate series (called Ron) appears to be a good measure of monetary policy actions. That analysis examines the behaviour of orthogonalised Ron innovations and the responses of key macro variables to these Ron shocks.

Begins with an introduction that situates corrections issues within the broader criminal justice and community response to violence against women. The second section identifies four areas of research and development: individual differences in male batterers and treatment effects; pro-feminist investigations of treatment content and modalities, and their qualitative impact from the perspectives of male batterers and their partners; development of culturally appropriate treatment strategies; and development of co-ordinated responses and community responsibility. The analytical frameworks and research priorities of each area are outlined. The third section presents an overview of specific projects and an analysis of what was learned from each. Concludes with general observations about the effectiveness of male batterer treatment programs and the challenges encountered in the development of intervention programs and community-based initiatives.

PAC-RIM LNG Inc. has applied under the Environmental Assessment Act for a project approval certificate for its proposed liquefied natural gas (LNG) facility. According to the project proposal, PAC-RIM would purchase natural gas from British Columbia and Alberta sources and transport it via a dedicated pipeline to a LNG processing plant on the Pacific coast near either Kitimat or Prince Rupert. The coastal facility would include storage and processing facilities and a marine loading terminal. The purpose of the present document is to set out final project report specifications, or terms of reference, for the project report that is required to be filed in support of the PAC-RIM application. The preface describes the background to the current review of the LNG proposal, including the environmental assessment process and the status of the environmental assessment review of the proposed project. Project report specifications are then presented under the categories of general requirements; environmental, resource management, and technical issues related to the pipeline; issues related to the LNG facilities, marine loadout, tankers, and utility corridors; socio-economic and community issues; culture and heritage issues; First Nations issues; possible malfunctions and accidents; cumulative effects; other Canadian Environmental Assessment Act requirements; dismantling and abandonment; and Prince Rupert Port Corporation requirements.

Investigates contemporary school reform and parental involvement through open-ended, ethnographic interviews with 26 long-term urban parent activists. Draws attention to the politics of parental participation in schools and to the long-standing history of negotiation, conflict, and disputes, as well as the collaboration and partnerships between parents, teachers, and school officials. Explores questions of power and inequality and how they are lived and constituted in the daily interaction between families and schools. Aims to inform parent activists in the Toronto area, especially those who are or were involved in struggles to promote greater equity and justice in education. Urges boards of education and the Ontario Ministry of Education to seek out and learn from activists' experiences, particularly as they embark on forms of local school governance. Participants in the study note the role of a greater commitment to meaningful, democratic, and representative involvement of parents and families in school decision making.

The section on experts and initiatives is arranged geographically by continent, with separate subsections for Canada, the United States, United Nations, and other initiatives with a global mandate. Information given for each initiative or expert includes project and contact name, addresses (including electronic mail) and phone numbers, description of initiative, and publications if any. Nova Scotia has the highest disability rate in Canada, and consumer participation in the province's reformed health system necessarily involves persons with disabilities who, however, have been traditionally left out of the health system planning process. This report reviews a project that held nine town hall meetings across Nova Scotia to provide an opportunity to exchange information and ideas about health reform in the province. The project was also intended to enable consumers with disabilities to communicate health related issues and concerns. Issues raised at the meetings focused on three main areas: programs and services, accessibility, and the health reform process. In addressing these issues, possible action steps were discussed, and the solutions discussed centred around five content areas: programs and services, information, the health reform process, networking, and personal action. The report ends with a list of recommended policy changes that would facilitate the participation and representation of persons with disabilities in the reformed health system.

The study included determination of the feasibility of upgrading the tailings by such methods as crystallisation, compaction, and evaporation to meet standards for road salt applications; and a detailed economic analysis to determine the feasibility of selling the tailings with minimal upgrading as a salt/sand mix for use in road salt applications. The market for minimally upgraded tailings in Atlantic Canada and New England was investigated and a price was determined for the tailings in the event that, if the mine were to cease operation, the existing tailings pile could be disposed of at no cost to the province.

Describes the development of a mathematical model for prediction of survival time (ST) for cold exposure under sedentary conditions. The model is based on steady state heat conduction in a single cylinder comprised of a core and two concentric annular shells representing the fat plus skin and the clothing plus still boundary layer, respectively. The ambient condition can be either air or water, the distinction being made by assigning different values of insulation to the still boundary layer. Metabolic heat production (M) in the model is comprised of resting and shivering components. Where cold exposure is too severe for M to balance heat loss, ST is largely determined by the rate of heat loss from the body. Where a balance occurs, ST is governed by the endurance time for shivering. End of survival is marked by the deep core temperature reaching a value of 30 degrees C. The model was calibrated against survival data for cold water immersion and then applied to cold air exposure.

Preliminary economic evaluation of the costs and benefits of the daytime running lights regulation

By Eton Lawrence. Ottawa : Transport Canada, Road Safety, 1995. 11 p. : Bibl. MICROLOG 96-05206 (1 fiche)

The Canada Motor Vehicle Safety Standard 108 requires all vehicles produced for sale in Canada after December 1, 1989 be equipped with daytime running lights (DRL). This paper presents a cost-benefit analysis of the use of DRL in preventing collisions, taking into account the original equipment costs of fitting vehicles with DRL and with fuel consumption penalties associated with fitting and use of DRL. High and low costs estimates are given, reflecting factors such as the difference between integrating DRL into existing systems or into new vehicle designs. Benefits are calculated from the collision reduction rate due to DRL as determined in a 1995 Transport Canada study, combined with previously developed estimates of the standard cost of the avoided collisions.

Defines problem-centred, as opposed to referent-centred, knowledge as functional knowledge: knowledge that is built up around that problems that it can be applied to, and the problems that it can be used to solve. The present project sought to develop the idea of problem-centred knowledge on a number of levels: theoretical, experimental, and applied. Explores, on the theoretical level, the idea of problem-centred knowledge through a series of presentations and publications. On the experimental level, examines students' ability to identify their own knowledge problems, how these problems develop over time, whether students have any insight into some of the well-known misconceptions that they hold, and whether getting students to explore their knowledge problems can lead to conceptual change. On the applied level, explores and develops a number of computer-supported environments for promoting problem-centred learning, including a collaborative discourse environment, an animation environment, student-generated keyword search, and work in mathematics.

MICROLOG 96-05036 (1 fiche)

Documents the mineral potential evaluation procedure that the Ontario Geological Survey has developed and implemented for participation in land use planning assessments in areas where potentially conflicting land use activities have been or may be proposed. The procedure is also recommended for use by geological consultants performing mineral potential evaluations for municipalities and land use agencies. The procedure involves a subjective ranking of the mineral potential using objective, defined criteria. The region to be assessed is subdivided on the basis of geologic and metallogenic parameters, and the areas are ranked with respect to the occurrence of specific deposit types. The applicable geological, geophysical and/or geochemical, and economic criteria for each deposit type are each subjectively ranked and the ratings are combined in an overlapping circle scheme. Concludes with discussion of how the evaluation methodology can assist with the consideration of provincial interests in the municipal land use planning process under the 1990 Planning Act.

Salmonid enhancement activities in western Newfoundland before 1993 have centred on a number of public involvement projects sponsored and conducted by local Regional Development Associations. These projects have generally been of the low-capital, employment-intensive type, with most skills being acquired through on-the-job training. The focus of public involvement activities has been on smaller streams which had been severely abused or neglected in the past. Such streams are typically well below their salmonid production and spawning potentials. Enhancement strategies have included habitat evaluation and improvement, stock assessment, stocking activities, and public awareness and community involvement programs. This report documents the methodologies and data collection from the enhancement operations conducted at three sites: Hughes Brook, North Brook, and Bound Brook. Suggested technical recommendations regarding future activities at the respective sites are also provided, as well as a view of the future strategies or directions planned by each of the project proponents.

En réponse à l'une des recommandations du Groupe de travail fédéral-provincial-territorial sur les délinquants violents à risque élevé, un projet de recherche a été entrepris en vue de rassembler des données empiriques pouvant aider les procureurs de la Couronne à appliquer les dispositions relatives aux délinquants dangereux. Les dossiers de pénitenciers et de tribunaux relatifs à 64 délinquants dangereux (DD) de l'Ontario et de la Colombie-Britannique ont été dépouillés, ce qui a permis de tracer un profil détaillé de ce groupe de délinquants. Les DD ont ensuite été comparés à un autre groupe de délinquants violents à risque élevé, c'est-à-dire 34 délinquants ayant récidivé (DR) après un maintien en incarcération. La seconde partie du projet de recherche a consisté en une série d'interviews menées auprès de 21 procureurs de la Couronne (dont un procureur du Québec) ayant l'expérience de l'application des dispositions relatives aux délinquants dangereux.

Trois enseignantes et un enseignant de deux écoles élémentaires de la section de langue française du Conseil des écoles catholiques du Grand Toronto ont participé au projet, qui s'est déroulé pendant l'année scolaire 1993-1994. Finally, the guide presents suggestions on drift prospecting, including the use and limitations of glacial sediments in drift prospecting programs, overburden sampling methodologies, the identification of kimberlite indicator minerals, and the application of overburden studies to kimberlite exploration (boulder tracing, heavy mineral tracing, geochemical signatures).

Estimates the relationship between provincial credit ratings as assessed by Standard & Poor's and a number of economic variables, using the ordered probit methodology. The methodology is used to estimate the probabilities for the different bond ratings assigned to the provinces for given values of such explanatory variables as employment ratio, provincial gross domestic product as a share of total Canadian gross domestic product, federal transfers as a share of total provincial revenues, and proportion of provincial personal income represented by unemployment insurance benefits. The paper reviews Standard & Poor's rating scale and the history of ratings for Canadian provincial governments, then describes the ordered probit model, and reports estimation results. Projections are generated for provincial credit ratings over the rest of the 1990s under different economic scenarios.

Dans le cadre de ses travaux sur les oiseaux menacés, le Service canadien de la faune a entrepris, en 1993, d'étudier le Rôle jaune et de faire la lumière sur sa situation dans le sud du Québec, notamment le long du couloir du fleuve Saint-Laurent. Le but de ce rapport est de résumer l'ensemble des travaux faits par le Service canadien de la faune sur le Rôle

Les points précisément abordés sont les suivants : aire d'étude; dénombrements; capture et baguage; suivi téléométrique; recherche de nids; et, description des habitats. Le rapport résume donc l'ensemble des informations qui ont été recueillies.

En 1992, la Conférence des Nations Unies sur l'environnement et le développement (CNUED) a réuni des représentants de presque tous les pays du monde dans le but d'inciter la communauté mondiale à s'engager à poursuivre les objectifs du développement durable. Action 21, l'une des principales réalisations de cette conférence, est un plan d'action ambitieux portant sur 39 questions concernant l'environnement et le développement. Par la suite, les Nations Unies ont créé la Commission du développement durable (CDD) pour assurer un suivi des progrès réalisés dans l'atteinte des objectifs de la CNUED. Ce rapport du Canada à la CDD résume les progrès accomplis, les enseignements qu'ils ont tirés de leurs expériences et les défis auxquels ils ont fait face pour atteindre les objectifs du développement durable. Le rapport met l'accent sur les chapitres et thèmes d'Action 21 qui seront débattus à la prochaine session de la CDD. Le rapport tente plutôt d'isoler les tendances et thèmes majeurs des mesures prises par le Canada à l'égard de chacun des chapitres en question. Le rapport contient également une brève description des progrès accomplis récemment sur des sujets traités dans les chapitres concernant les questions sectorielles et abordés lors de la dernière session de la CDD.

Les autres dimensions de la concentration permettent de déterminer l'importance d'un groupe secondaire d'entreprises et sont reliées à des aspects différents de la mobilité à l'intérieur des branches d'activité comme le roulement des entreprises continuant d'exister. À l'aide de l'analyse de régression, nous trouvons, dans ce document, que l'entrée et la sortie constituent un facteur important qui détermine la concentration même après que l'on a tenu compte des effets d'échelle.

Regime switching models : a guide to the Bank of Canada Gauss procedures

By Simon Van Norden and Robert Vigfusson. Ottawa : Bank of Canada, 1996. 22 p. : Bibl. (Working paper / Bank of Canada ; 96-3 ISSN 1192-5434) ISBN 0-662-24293-9 MICROLOG 96-05093 (1 fiche)

This paper is a manual for using a set of Gauss procedures developed to estimate regime-switching models. In these models, the observable dependent variable's behaviour is state-dependent. The state, which is itself unobservable, determines the process that generates the dependent variable. The relationship between this period's state and the previous periods' states determines what set of procedures to use. In a first-order Markov model, the current state is dependent only on the last period's state; in a simple-switching model, the current state is independent of the previous periods' states. The procedures presented are for two state models with a single dependent variable. The model can be either a Markov model or a simple-switching model. The procedures allow switching in the parameters for any number of explanatory variables, including non-constant transition probabilities.

Cette étude traite de la variation de l'emploi dans le secteur manufacturier au Canada entre les années 70 et le début des années 80. L'évolution de l'économie canadienne suscite un transfert constant de ressources d'une utilisation à une autre. La plupart des études antérieures se sont surtout intéressées à l'ampleur des déplacements des travailleurs d'une industrie à l'autre. Nous examinons plutôt ici la mesure dans laquelle l'emploi est redistribué entre les unités de production du secteur manufacturier canadien en raison du fait que certaines entreprises prospèrent et que d'autres régressent. Pour ce faire, nous étudions à la fois la variation de l'emploi liée à l'entrée et à la sortie d'entreprises et celle qui résulte de la croissance et du déclin des entreprises en place. La redistribution de l'emploi découle de la variation de la taille relative des entreprises dans une industrie par rapport à une autre et à l'intérieur d'une même industrie.

The 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (UNCED) brought together almost every country in the world in an effort to have the global community commit itself to the goal of sustainable development. Among its major achievements was Agenda 21, an ambitious plan of action on 39 environment and development issues. The United Nations subsequently created the Commission on Sustainable Development (CSD) to monitor progress towards achievement of UNCED's goals. This report of Canada to the CSD summarizes the progress, lessons learned, and challenges in achieving the goals of sustainable development. It concentrates on the chapters and themes in Agenda 21 that will be discussed at the next session of the CSD. It attempts to isolate the major trends and themes in Canadian responses to each of those chapters. It also includes short summaries of recent developments in topics related to the sectoral chapters discussed during the latest session of the CSD.

Research issues in evaluating deinstitutionalization : a review of the literature

Roeher Institute. North York, ON : The Institute, 1995. 66 p. : Bibl.
MICROLOG 96-04698 (1 fiche) (Available on fiche only)

The policies of deinstitutionalisation in Canada have evolved since the 1960s, from simply moving people with psychiatric or intellectual disabilities between large residential facilities and community-based services, to a focus on issues related to basic human rights and well-being. This literature review was undertaken in the context of the shifting scope and meaning of such policies. It focuses on the process of research on deinstitutionalisation, making an effort to distinguish between different types of evaluation research, methodologies, success indicators, and the relationship between the evaluation process and the deinstitutionalisation initiative. Different assumptions central to the research frameworks are highlighted. Specifically, the review examines the goals and concerns underlying deinstitutionalisation, with particular reference to the various stakeholders in the deinstitutionalisation process; the various ways in which the objectives are framed in the research literature; the scope and aims of evaluation efforts; research design issues in evaluating deinstitutionalisation; the diversity in research findings; and the emerging issues in evaluating the outcomes of deinstitutionalisation. Appendices provide lists of indicators that emerge in the research with respect to individual characteristics and personal relationships; service provision and community inclusion; and system and society.

Reuse of alkali cleaning solution at Stelco Inc.'s, no. 2 : continuous annealing line : final report

By R.E. Bowering and G.A. Roeder. Toronto : Ministry of Environment & Energy, 1996. 1, 40 p. : ill., Bibl. ISBN 0-7778-4647-0
MICROLOG 96-05015 (1 fiche)

The continuous annealing lines at the Stelco Hilton Works historically generated nearly three million litres annually of spent alkali cleaning solution. This paper describes a project undertaken to find a way to recycle this solution, thereby eliminating the costs and environmental problems associated with disposing of waste alkali. A series of developmental trials resulted in a new system that makes possible continuous recycling of the cleaning solution using a state of the art ultrafiltration unit that removes residual oils and other contaminants. The paper reviews the environmental and economic results of the project, the criteria for successful on-line recycling of alkali cleaners, the theory and operation of ultrafiltration systems, and the results of the demonstration trials and full-scale operation of the new system.

Les variations de l'état de santé selon les groupes de revenus et d'autres classifications de la situation socio-économique sont un sujet qui soulève beaucoup d'intérêt. Cette étude présente une analyse de la mortalité masculine entre 65 et 74 ans en fonction de caractéristiques socio-économiques, plus précisément les revenus tirés d'un emploi ou d'un travail autonome au cours de la période de 10 à 20 ans avant que les personnes atteignent 65 ans, l'état matrimonial, l'état d'incapacité et l'âge à la retraite. L'analyse se fonde sur des données administratives du Régime de pensions du Canada couvrant plus de 500,000 personnes. L'analyse permet de discerner des gradients significatifs de la mortalité sur l'ensemble de la gamme des revenus. Une analyse multidimensionnelle fait également ressortir clairement de tels gradients.

The bull trout (Salvelinus confluentus) is an endemic western North American char that is an interior species in British Columbia. Before 1978, it was considered a subspecies of the Dolly Varden trout (Salvelinus malma), whose range it overlaps. This report reviews the biology of relevant life-history stages of the bull trout, including spawning, egg development and hatching, fry habitat and feeding, juvenile habitat and feeding, and adult habitats and feeding. It then describes other relevant biological features of the species, such as migration and homing behaviour, stock characteristics, and population size, and discusses the environmental impacts on bull trout of river impoundments, logging and other industrial activities, recreational fishing, and interactions with other species. Finally, the report presents opportunities for habitat compensation and improvement of bull trout populations, which have been in decline over recent years. Gaps in bull trout knowledge requiring further research are also outlined.

A Review of the Impact of B.C.'s social safety net reforms on income assistance caseloads and savings

By Ronald S. Hikel. Victoria : Ministry of Social Services, 1996. 20 p. : ill.
MICROLOG 96-04808 (1 fiche)

In this review of the Impact of British Columbia's reform of its social safety net on income-assistance caseloads, the investigators relied on a number of methods to develop reasonable estimates. These methods included the results of program evaluations, recent research, and the experience of other jurisdictions. The review only used existing data and relied on documentation provided by the Ministry of Social Services. Using the Ministry's caseload forecasting model, a reliable base caseload projection was established to show the probable caseloads if no changes were made. The impacts of the various new policy measures were then analysed to develop three caseload reduction scenarios, and the associated expenditure savings were estimated by applying a range of costs per case month to the caseload reduction estimates. The review presents the results of these forecasts and also assesses the effects on caseload of policy changes already implemented.

The Robson Valley Timber Supply Area (TSA) covers 1,235,821 hectares in east central British Columbia. The current timber harvesting land base in this rugged, mountainous region is under 17% of the total land area. After a brief description of the TSA, this report reviews the principles for determining the allowable annual cut for the TSA and presents an accounting of the factors and the rationale used in making that determination. These factors include the role of the base-case timber supply forecast, the land base contributing to the timber harvest, existing forest inventory, expected rate of growth, regeneration delay, silvicultural systems, decay and waste, integrated resource management objectives, harvest flow alternatives, the Robson Valley Land and Resource Management Plan, and pulpwood agreements. The purpose of the Saanich Inlet study was to determine the sensitivity of the inlet to contaminants and marine habitat disturbances from urban and rural development, and to determine the inlet's capacity to assimilate these contaminants and disturbances without environmental degradation. This report provides technical highlights from the study, starting with an overview of the cultural, aesthetic, and environmental values of the inlet and of the human uses of the inlet. The next three sections describe the oceanographic and sedimentation processes required to support analyses of assimilative capacity. Sections 7 to 9 describe the detailed quantitative analyses used to estimate assimilative capacity for chemical contaminants, bacterial contamination, and nutrients. Section 10 focuses on marine biota and presents the status of marine species and key habitats. The sensitivity of key species and habitats is described and recommendations for remedial action and protection are made. Finally, the report takes key findings and integrates them from a geographical perspective. Includes glossary. Appendices contain a list of parameters of the environmental fate and food-chain bioaccumulation models used in the study; a description of the inlet's phytoplankton composition; and a carbon/nutrient model description and results.

Work was conducted in four distinct sites chosen because they offered potential for learning about linkages: a small isolated board with significant Native population; a large urban multicultural setting; a mid-size county board with union and rural components; and one site with a significant francophone population. Data (qualitative and quantitative) were collected through site visits and telephone interviews. At each site, schools and boards were working with partners in the communities, but linkages at all sites were in many respects idiosyncratic. The Senior driver education pilot study

By Leo Tasca. Toronto : Safety Policy Branch, Safety Research Office, 1995. 47 p. : Bibl. ISBN 0-7778-4674-8
MICROLOG 96-05020 (1 fiche)

Describes a pilot study conducted to evaluate the effectiveness of a group education and information session for drivers aged 80 and over, who in Ontario are required to take an annual vision, written, and road test. About 2,600 senior drivers participated and were assigned to either the group education session or the mandatory road test. The Senior Driver Research Inventory (SDRI), a questionnaire on older driver self-awareness of risk, was completed by 47% of the participants. This SDRI attempts to measure a driver's perception or awareness of abilities, deficits, and personal risk, as well as self-reported compensatory behaviours. Six two-way analyses of variance were done to determine whether there were any statistically significant differences in the SDRI subscale scores by the assigned treatment (education session or road test) and the time of SDRI administration (SDRI completed before or after treatment). The appendix contains a copy of the SDRI and a copy of the respondent evaluation forms. BS ED ON PR SA SS TR

Senior years apprenticeship option : proposal for consultation and implementation

Ottawa : Manitoba Education & Training, 1995. 23 p. : Bibl.
MICROLOG 96-04942 (1 fiche)

The development of technical vocational education in Manitoba senior years schools has resulted in a senior years vocational training system which is well positioned regionally. The challenge is to update programs and articulate the senior years with other advanced education and training programs. Of the many attempts made since the early 1970s to rationalise a training culture, recent discussions have centred on the concept of a senior years apprenticeship option. This paper is intended as the basis for discussion as that option is being developed. The paper reviews current practices in apprenticeship training in Manitoba and then outlines the senior years apprenticeship option, including entrance and participation requirements, accreditation, marketing strategy, relevance of academic courses, scheduling of training, in-class or institutional theory training, the employer as trainer, minimum wages, and workplace orientation. The roles and responsibilities of the various partners in the apprenticeship option are also defined. Final sections of the paper cover financing of the option, the partnership consultation process, and program evaluation.

Presents results of a literature review and an experimental program on the thermal sensitivity of energetic material (munitions and propellants). A number of factors likely to be of importance in modelling and testing sensitivity to hot fragment attack were identified, the foremost of which is the transfer of heat across material boundaries. The researchers constructed a thermal conductivity apparatus to investigate thermal transfer coefficients in order to provide data both for modelling and for comparison with sensitivity tests. In addition, they developed a thermal impact tester designed to provide a laboratory estimate of sensitivity to hot fragment attack, and characterised the tester using several materials currently in use or under development. A protocol for using the tester to determine sensitivity to hot fragment attack is included.

Au cours des 10 à 20 dernières années, il y a eu plusieurs changements dans le domaine du logement à Ottawa-Carleton. L'analyse des tendances socio-économiques et démographiques et des tendances de la production de logements pendant cette période fait voir le grand tableau de la façon dont l'offre de logement a répondu à la demande des résidents. Ce survol historique, qui vise à dégager les grands enjeux sur lesquels il faut approfondir la recherche, se divise en trois parties : 1) les tendances socio-économiques et démographiques, 2) les tendances de l'offre de logement, et 3) les nouveaux enjeux dans le domaine du logement.

Seven Mile Generating Station, Unit 4 application review and recommendations report

British Columbia. Environmental Assessment Office. Victoria : The Office, 1996. vii, 105 p. : Maps, Bibl.

MICROLOG 96-04856 (2 fiche)

BC Hydro is seeking provincial government approval to install and operate a fourth generating unit in an existing bay at its Seven Mile Generating Station on the Pend d'Oreille River in south-eastern British Columbia. The new unit would provide an additional capacity of about 200 megawatts to the station. This report summarises the environmental review process for this project, the public and First Nations consultations regarding the project and its impacts, the issues identified by the review participants, and the measures required to prevent or mitigate all significant adverse impacts of the proposal. The main issues of concern involved the potential impacts to fish and fish habitat, and potential traffic and recreational facility impacts during the construction period. Socio-economic effects and impacts on archaeological and historical resources are also noted. The report concludes with an outline of commitments made and additional requirements for permits, licences, and approvals, and a list of recommendations regarding approval of the project.

Comme son nom l'indique, le sida cause un déficit du système immunitaire, exposant ainsi la victime à des affections rares et fatales. Le virus que l'on tient responsable du sida, le virus de l'immunodéficience humaine (VIH) a été identifié en 1983. Le mode d'action de ce virus inhabituel est encore mal connu, et il n'existe pas de traitement véritablement efficace contre le sida ou l'infection par le VIH. Ce document se penche précisément sur les aspects médicaux et scientifiques du sida.

The federal government has created Special Operating Agencies (SOAs) to improve the delivery and cost efficiency of government services. By the end of 1993, 15 SOAs either had been approved or had come into existence. This study evaluates the SOA initiative through a program of interviews, a detailed assessment of changes in six SOAs and their host departments, a review of the literature on administrative reform, and discussions of possible changes in course with managers and other stakeholders. The study focused on what to do with the SOA model now, and how the government might use the lessons learned so far to support an agenda for administrative reform. It presents information about SOA performance under six headings: service, achievement of planned public purposes, financial performance and productivity, working environment, direction and focus, and monitoring performance. It also discusses the nature of the SOA as a transitional vehicle to prepare some units of government and their staff to exist and survive in more independent organisational forms, and as a vehicle for learning. Finally, the study reviews the lessons learned and suggests how to apply these lessons.

In the Canadian Forces, human factors engineering (HFE) issues are not often considered in the project planning process until late in the development, if at all, when a human factors related problem is identified. This paper advocates an earlier consideration of HFE issues than is currently employed; in particular, it urges an early understanding of the users and their roles as a key feature of the overall process. The paper describes a survey of development and acquisition of equipment in the Canadian Forces, based on the overall approach to HFE in military system development specified in the standard MIL-STD-46855. Limitations of two major sources of user input into that process are discussed and possible solutions reviewed. Finally, the paper describes the Soldier's Day multimedia database developed as part of an initiative to provide baseline data to requirements officers, engineering agencies, research establishments, and contractors.

The three alternatives are: seceding from Winnipeg to become an independent rural municipality; seceding from Winnipeg to join the existing municipality of Ritchot; and remaining in Winnipeg, either as the status quo or with tax concessions. The report includes background information on the area's tax situation, a community profile, financial profiles, and an overview of the consultation process that studied alternative arrangements. Costs and benefits of the alternatives for property owners, the communities affected, and the city of Winnipeg are estimated. The appendix includes detailed community and financial profiles.

Les statistiques de mobilité sont des mesures directes du degré de concurrence. Les indicateurs de structure de marché sont des mesures indirectes du même phénomène. L'indicateur de structure de marché le plus utilisé comme mesure approximative du degré de concurrence dans une branche d'activités est le ratio de concentration. Bien que les indicateurs de structure ne sont que des mesures approximatives du degré de concurrence, les économistes s'en servent largement dans l'élaboration et l'application des politiques touchant la concurrence. Cet article vise à étudier le bien-fondé de l'utilisation des indicateurs de structure.

The use of strategic planning for broad regional and subregional landscapes in order to address land allocation and management issues is increasingly recognised as an important part of an effective land use planning system. This source book offers a context and rationale for strategic land use planning in British Columbia and provides advice on the design and delivery of participatory planning processes. It is based on a review of the land use and environmental planning literature and on planning examples from various jurisdictions, especially from the lessons learned in British Columbia's recent attempts to integrate strategic land use planning as a key part of an overall provincial sustainability strategy. The first chapter reviews basics of land use planning. Chapter two describes the characteristics of strategic land use planning and keys to its success. The subsequent chapters describe the preparatory phase of the planning process, designing and clarifying the process and its procedures, developing plan goals, building a plan toolkit (including natural resource values information, geographic information systems, and an evaluation system), and developing land use plan scenarios. The final chapter discusses the activities that might be undertaken to conclude the development of a comprehensive strategic land use plan agreement. Appendices include various examples illustrating the points covered in the main text.

The undirected selective travelling salesman problem (STSP) is defined on a graph with positive profits associated with vertices, and distances associated with edges. The STSP consists of determining a maximal profit Hamiltonian cycle over a subset of vertices whose length does not exceed a pre-set limit. This paper describes a tabu search heuristic for the STSP. The algorithm iteratively inserts clusters of vertices in the current tour or removes a chain of vertices. Computational results are provided for tests performed on randomly generated instances with up to 300 vertices.

The clustered travelling salesman problem (TSP) is an extension of the classic TSP where the set of vertices is partitioned into clusters. The objective is to find a least-cost Hamiltonian cycle such that the vertices of each cluster are visited contiguously and the clusters are visited in a pre-specified order. This paper proposes a tabu search heuristic to solve this problem. The algorithm periodically restarts its search by merging two elite solutions to form a new starting solution. In a manner reminiscent of genetic algorithms. Computational results are reported on sets of Euclidean problems with different characteristics.

These sections detail some common concerns expressed by teachers and suggest teaching strategies to address each concern. A number of suggestions are included for most of the concerns so that teachers can select strategies that suit both the student and the structure of the classroom. The strategies can be used as pre-referral intervention, ideas for the development of an individual education plan, or as coping mechanisms while the classroom teacher awaits specialist consultation or assessment. The Dead Creek lead-zinc-quartz float occurrence comprises several dozen angular, mineralised quartz boulders concentrated in a surface area (an island in a bog) of only a few hundred square metres in south-western New Brunswick. This report describes investigations of Dead Creek till stratigraphy and geochemistry, conducted to determine the possible origin of the occurrence. Hypotheses tested are that the float is an ablation lag of distal origin and that the float has a local source.

This note introduces two concepts relevant to stratifying the environment for locating potential field survey plots. The first arises out of the integration and analysis of site data in relation to spatial databases, and the second simply makes further use of available spatial databases. These spatial databases quantify processes that drive biological response, such as climate and vegetation cover. Three existing survey systems for monitoring insect, disease, and forest health monitoring sites are used to illustrate the advantages of employing spatial databases in survey design. The examples provide a climate domain analysis for Ontario, a bioclimatic analysis of red pine and sclerodermis, and an outline of the development of climate classifications.

The control and management of toxic substances in Canada has not been assumed by any one level of government and requires the input of both the federal and provincial governments. It is essential, therefore, that efforts are coordinated and made as uniform as possible. The success of interjurisdictional efforts to control toxic substances ultimately depends upon the adequacy of standards throughout the country, the effectiveness of mechanisms to enforce those standards and the ability of the federal and provincial governments to coordinate their efforts in this regard. This document precisely looks at the federal-provincial control of toxic substances.

The project reported was intended to help teachers implement Transition Years objectives by providing them with skills-based in-service focused on their expressed needs. There was a series of projects: three-day workshops on strategies for teaching in mixed-abilities classes; a three-day summer institute on practical ideas about the needs of adolescents, specific teaching techniques, and assessment strategies; a two-session workshop on student evaluation issues such as authentic assess-

The practical in-service activities of the projects were combined with three academic activities focused on teacher efficacy: a review of previous research on teacher efficacy; an evaluation of one of the in-service projects; and an examination of within- and between-teacher influences on teacher efficacy, using data collected in four of the in-service sessions.

As a first step toward a predictive model for explosive and propellant production processes, this memorandum reports the use of a stochastic algorithm to describe qualitatively the evolution of molecular species during polyurethane formation. To optimise the processing window of polyurethane-based formulations, the polymerisation reaction has been modelled by Monte Carlo simulations. For this purpose, the researchers developed a numerical code in ANSI FORTRAN 77 that allows simulation of A2 + B2 polymerisation with provision for unequal reactivity of the reaction sites. Simulation results are presented for simplified formulations based on hydroxy-terminated polybutadiene and glycidyl azide polymer. Minor modifications to the algorithm will enable simulation of more complex polymerisation systems. The appendix contains a program listing of the code used for molecular weight distribution estimation of polyurethane systems.

Using temporal difference learning for closed-loop resource allocation

By Jean Berger, Serge Roy and Stressy Gallant. Courcellette, PQ : Defence Research Establishment Valcartier, 1995. v, 18 p. : Bibl. (DREV memorandum / Defence Research Establishment Valcartier ; TM-9504) MICROLOG 96-05208 (1 fiche)

Closed-loop resource allocation in naval tactical defence is very complex and often relies on the use of specific heuristics showing random variations in the expected solution quality. As a result, problems where combinatorial issues over time are critical to resource allocation require proper models to be defined and suitable algorithms to be developed. This paper proposes a neural network algorithm using the temporal difference method as a learning technique to solve a closed-loop dynamic weapon-target allocation problem. The learning process is driven by the estimation of the outcome prediction of a battle scenario at a specific time, given the sequence of action decisions taken so far. Combined with past experience, the neural network progressively modifies its internal representation of the solution space in order to improve the quality of the decision in timely planning resource allocation. Computer simulation results conducted within the context of naval anti-air warfare for a single-problem representation compare the performance of the proposed approach to that of a greedy heuristic and of a random resource allocation policy.

Au Canada comme dans bien d'autres pays, une forte proportion de la population avance en âge. Le baby boom s'explique du fait que le taux de fécondité a atteint un sommet de 3,9 au milieu des années 60 avant de s'effondrer à 1,7 au début des années 70. Le taux est resté à peu près constant depuis ce temps. Toutefois, comme le Fonds monétaire international le signalait récemment dans une étude des sept grands pays industrialisés, le Canada connaît le plus bas niveau des prévisions de dépenses publiques associées au vieillissement démographique. L'auteur a ensuite établi en détail la projection des effets de la population vieillissante. Dans ce document nous reprenons des parties de son analyse pour les actualiser et les pousser plus loin.

The ARET (Accelerated Reduction/Elimination of Toxics) initiative grew out of a private-sector action to improve environmental decision-making. ARET is an experiment to determine whether voluntary commitments to reduce or eliminate emissions can achieve environmental goals faster and more flexibly than regulations alone. In spring 1994, ARET challenged selected companies and government departments to achieve specific targets and schedules for reduction or elimination of emissions of a long list of toxic substances. This report is ARET's first summary of responses to that challenge. It begins with an overview of ARET and the criteria used for selecting substances for action. It then summarizes information received from organisations that submitted action plans, describing their commitments to voluntary action. The information includes emission reduction and elimination goals by organisation, substance, and sector. Finally, the report summarises the common sectoral issues and barriers or constraints to action that were identified by ARET participants. A table shows how participants are tracking and publicly reporting their progress toward achieving their goals. Appendices include a list of candidate substances for action and a directory of ARET participants. CA EV ND SC ST

Wilderness Issues in British Columbia : results of a 1993 province-wide survey of households

By Recreation, BC Ministry of Forests... et al. Victoria : Canada-British Columbia Partnership Agreement on Forest Resource Development: FRDA II, 1995. xii, 139 p. : Ill. (Working paper / Canada-British Columbia Partnership Agreement on Forest Resource Development: FRDA II ; WP-6-010) This study was prepared in cooperation with the Economic and Social Analysis Program of the Canada-British Columbia Partnership Agreement on Forest Resource Development: FRDA II. MICROLOG 96-04870 (2 fiche)

The British Columbia government is trying to address issues related to the protection and management of wilderness in the province, including the benefits and costs of setting aside wilderness areas and the appropriate use of these areas. To help in understanding public feelings about such issues, the government conducted a province-wide mail survey in 1993 whose results are reported in this document. Findings are based on a 54% return from a random sample of 3,000 adult British Columbians who were asked their views on the relative importance of eleven environmental issues, the importance and benefits of designated wilderness areas, the economic value of wilderness areas, the acceptable uses of designated wilderness, and wilderness recreational use characteristics and expenditures. The report also compares the views of wilderness area users and non-users, and also the views of rural and urban dwellers. The appendix includes a copy of the survey questionnaire and tables summarising the responses. BC BS CA ND NR PR SC ST

Women and legal aid : access to justice

A joint submission by: Coverdale Court Work Services, Nova Scotia Association of Women and the Law, Nova Scotia Advisory Council on the Status of Women, Halifax : The Services ; The Assn ; The Advisory Council, 1996. 11 p.
MICROLOG 96-05124 (1 fiche)

Presents a submission to a team reviewing the Nova Scotia provincial legal aid system, stressing the inadequacies and inequalities inherent in the current system with respect to the rights of women. Notes that funding for criminal legal aid, mainly used by men, is relatively secure compared to funding for family legal aid, mainly used by women in cases. Of particular importance are cases involving family violence, which illustrate the inequalities faced by women seeking legal aid. Problems with the existing delivery of legal aid services are reviewed, including the difficulty of finding lawyers, types of services covered, and the different funding structures between criminal and civil legal aid matters. Effects of legal aid cutbacks and the problems of women seeking legal aid for representation on summary offence matters are also noted.

This brief focuses on the Bill's likely effects on women as individual workers, particularly those in part-time, low-wage, seasonal, and unstable jobs. The brief also discusses the overall impact of the legislation on women and their families in the context of high unemployment and the crisis in the Nova Scotia fishery. Specific topics covered include the hours-based entry and qualifying system for unemployment insurance, reductions in benefits and their duration, discrimination between those in standard and non-standard employment, the family supplement for low-income families, and the complexity of the unemployment insurance system. The appendix contains a list of recommendations for the unemployment insurance system and tables showing estimated impacts of the proposed legislative changes.

Basic transformations in social environmental concerns, in the structure of management problems, and in the tools to approach these problems have rendered conventional monolithic modelling approaches difficult, costly, and of little relevance to resolving today's emerging problems in forest management. This publication presents proceedings of a workshop addressing hierarchical planning in forest management, involving the use of integrated systems of small models that can be linked with each other. Topics of workshop papers include hierarchical planning in forest resource management and in the forest products industry; tactical level harvest scheduling; policy analysis models; resource allocation mechanism design; applications of hierarchical forest planning; analysis of old-growth designations; incorporating wildlife objectives into forest planning; decision support systems; and data and decision aggregation processes.
